twelve and under boys led off, fighting the now oppressive heat, to finish in second and third place (2nd: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Ulmer, W.). The twelve and under girls came right back with a win, and a third and fourth place finish (1st: Herman, E.; 3rd: Lehr, S.; 4th: Fortin, S.). At the fourteen and under level both the boys and girls finished in first place (boys: 1st: Berg, P.; 3rd: Zappolo, N.; 4th: Daly, B.; girls: 1st: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Daley, M.), and the seventeen and unders rounded off the event with the boys and girls taking second and third places (boys: 2nd: Roach; 3rd: Blackburn; girls: 2nd: Regan, D.; 3rd: Anderson, C.). Cohasset had now accumulated 97 points to Duxbury's 64.

The eight and under boys kicked off the 25 yard freestyles with first, second and third place finishes and the girls followed close behind with another win, a second and a fourth place (boys: 1st: Mahoney, R.; 2nd: Durkin, J.; 3rd: Murphy, C.; girls: 1st: Donohue, M.; 2nd: Haber, A.; 4th Farren, N.). The ten and unders produced an almost identical result with the boys finishing first, second and fourth and the girls placing first, third and fourth (boys: 1st: Carrier, J.; 2nd: Porter, I.; 4th: Murphy, J.; girls: 1st: Lehr, V.; 3rd: Michalowski, A.; 4th: Karski, E.).

In the 50 yard event the twelve and under boys again managed to secure a win, then took third and sixth places (1st: Drybanski, J.; 3rd: Cunningham, C.; 6th: Porter, N.), while the girls, finished second, fourth and sixth (2nd: Meehan, S.; 4th Mahoney, C.; 6th: Teague, M.). The fourteen and under boys again just missed the win, but finished second, third and fourth (2nd: Conway, C.; 3rd: Roach, K.; 4th: Gammon, B.), and the girls pushed back with a first place finish (girls: 1st: Englander, E.; 2nd: Musto, L.; 5th: Lieb-Lappen, M.).

The seventeen and unders rounded off the freestyles with a shut out from the girls and second, third and fourth places for the boys (girls: 1st: Jerome, E.; 2nd: Lehr, R.; 3rd: Ogrodnik, M.; boys: 2nd: Lehr, R.; 3rd: McCarthy, D.; 4th: Blackburn, C.). Cohasset had now secured a 69 point advantage.

Almost half way through the meet, with the temperature now in the high 90's the teams launched into the butterfly. Cohasset started well with first, second and third place finishes in the boys, eight and under event (1st: Mahoney, R.; 2nd: MacCormack, P.; 3rd: Kissick, C.). The girls fell behind slightly, but still managed to take second, third and sixth places (2nd: Farren, A.; 3rd: Berube, M.; 6th: Gibbons, E.). The ten and under boys again took the win while in the girls race Duxbury came out strong to force the visitors into third, fourth and fifth positions (boys: 1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Shipp, M.; 3rd: Buckley, T.; girls: 3rd: Mahoney, M.; 4th: Musto, E.; 5th: Karski, E.). The 25 yard races were rounded off with wins for both the twelve and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Doonan, P.; 3rd: Ulmer, W.; 5th: Cunningham, C.; girls: 1st: Sacks, M.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; 4th: Meehan, S.).

In the 50 yard butterfly, Cohasset was unable to field a swimmer for the fourteen and under boy's race, but Mamme Daly, swimming alone in her event, managed to bring home a win for the girls. The seventeen and under boys rounded off the butterflies with a second, while the girls finished in second, third and fifth places (boys: Tehranian, K.; girls: 2nd: Jerome, E.; 3rd: Regan, D.; 5th: Ogrodnik, M.).

The breaststroke was up next and the eight and unders once again upped the pace to win both the girls and the boys events (boys: 1st: Durkin, J.; 2nd: Culhane, E.J.; 4th: Murphy, C.; girls: 1st: Haber, A.; 2nd: Berube: M.; 5th: Caron, C.). The ten and under boys, again swimming 25 yards, managed another win, but the girls were forced into third, fourth and sixth places (boys: 1st: Yeager, J.; 2nd: Porter, I.; 4th: Leahy, S.; girls: 3rd: Michalowski, A.; 4th: Teague, K.; 6th: Zappolo, C.).

In the 50 yard breaststroke, the Cohasset squad was dominant in each of the six races, finishing with a win at each age level (boys, twelve and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Kelly, T; 5th: Kuppens, C.; girls, twelve and under: 1st: Lehr, S.; 3rd: Fortin, S.; 4th: Campbell, A.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Conway, C.; 2nd: Roach, K.; 3rd: Daly, B.; girls, fourteen and under: 1st: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Lieb-Lappen, M.; 5th: Whoriskey, K.; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Lehr, R.; 3rd: Gammon, B.; girls, seventeen and under: 1st: Anderson, C.; 2nd: Regan, D.). Cohasset now led Duxbury by 119 points.

The backstroke began with the usual heroic effort by the eight and under boys, who finished first, second and fourth (1st: MacCormack, R.; 2nd: Salerno, J.; 4th: Carpenter, C.) and although the girls missed the win, they placed second, third and fourth (2nd: Donohue, M; 3rd: Farren, A.; 4th: Farren, N.). The ten and unders came up with the similar results with a win for the boys and second, fourth and fifth for the girls (boys: 1st: Carrier, J.; 2nd: Queenan, C.; 5th: Murphy, J.; girls: 2nd: Mahoney, M.; 4th: Culhane, C.; 5th: Musto, E.).

In the 50 yard event, the twelve and under boys again produced a win, and the girls held the pace with first, second and fifth place finishes (boys: 1st: Drybanski, J.; 2nd: Doonan, P.; 4th: Daly, R.; girls: 1st: Herman, E.; 2nd: Teague, M.; 5th: Ryan, K.). The fourteen and under boys and girls matched their younger team mates with wins in both their races, and the event finished with a win for the seventeen and under girls and second and third places for the boys (boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Zappolo, N.; 3rd: Gammon, B.; 4th: Roach, K.; girls: 1st Daley, M.; 2nd: Englander, E.; 4th: Musto, L.; boys, seventeen and under: 2nd: Tehranian, K.; 3rd: McCarthy, D.; girls, seventeen and under: 1st: Jerome, E.; 2nd: Lehr, R.).

The meet concluded with the 100 and 200 yard free relays. The temperature was still punishing but spirits remained high and performances were first rate. Cohasset, particularly, were in fighting form and finished the meet with wins in all but one of the final relay events (boys, eight and under: 1st: Mahoney; Murphy; Carpenter; Durkin; 2nd: Kennedy; Kissick; McCarthy, M.; Salerno; 4th: Adkins, Berube; Fontaine; McCarthy, R.; girls, eight and under: 1st: Donohue; Berube; Farren, A.; Haber; 3rd: Farren, N.; Teague; McCunney; Gibbons; boys, ten and under: 1st: Carrier; Buckley; Porter; Doonan; 2nd: Campbell; Durkin, T.; Leahy; Shipp; 3rd: Durkin, J.;

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

I was blessed with the opportunity to watch true athletic greatness up close and over an extended period of time in the persons of Larry Bird and Bobby Orr. My father and many from his generation have often told me, though, that I've never seen anything to compare with Ted Williams.

I always figured this assertion was, to some extent, one of those "my generation is better than your generation" type deals.

This long held notion of mine began to quickly lose steam, however, following the July 5 passing of Ted Williams, as I listened to caller after caller on WEEI call to echo what my father had said to me so many times before.

As near as I can recall, the retirement of Larry Bird was met with but a fraction of this kind of outpouring in the days that followed. Now, granted, there's no way you can compare the end of an athletic career to the end of a life. Bare in mind, though, we're also talking about an individual here, in Ted Williams, who most of WEEI's "core audience" never even saw play.

Maybe my father really did know what he was talking about. It's amazing how often I have to make that admission these days.

There have been a handful of "hitters for average" who have deservedly been mentioned in the same breath with the Splendid Splinter over the years, and probably even more "hitters for power" who can enjoy the comparison, but clearly none before, during or since his time have put both offensive elements together as wondrously.

We've heard and read many classic lines from Teddy Ballgame over the last week or so, but none more than this:

"I wanted to be the greatest hitter who ever lived. A man has to have goals and that was mine, to have people say, 'There goes the greatest hitter who ever lived.'"

Damned it I'm going to argue with that.

There goes the greatest hitter who ever lived.

Parting shot

Sadly, much of the fond and reverent recollections of Ted Williams have been overshadowed in recent days by the stranger than fiction exploits of his son, John Henry Williams.

The debate about over the character of The Kid's kid seems moot at this point. The only dividing point in the deliberation seems to be immorality versus amorality. Whichever side of the fence any of us happen to be on, though, it seems fair to say that all of us are beyond the point of being shocked by any act committed by this gluttonous little twerp.

Of course, the thing most seem angered over where John Henry is concerned is the potential damage he might do to the image of his father, a bigger than life American Hero if ever there was one.

The debate over who was the greatest baseball player ever might well be as academic today as who was the greatest basketball player ever (thanks for that too, Mr. Jordan) if Ted had not given up five years in the prime of his career to serve his country in the armed services. Of course, in many ways, that only added to the Legend.

In the final analysis, at least in my mind, it seems silly to suggest someone as big as Ted Williams could have his reputation sullied by someone so small as John Henry Williams. Indeed, regardless of how big his bank account grows off his father's name and legend, his stature, ironically, seems destined to remain frozen forever more.

Shorter shots

Well done, Boston fans! Though I felt somewhat for Jim Thome, it sure was great to see justice prevail when Johnny Damon was voted in by the fans for the 30th and final spot on the AL all-star team, his first ever selection. I found myself dwelling on this matter quite a bit last Tuesday before the announcement, and must admit I was troubled for a bit following the afternoon announcement that Al Gore had declared himself the winner

Wah! Wah! Wah! Sometimes I don't know who annoys me more: the baseball players who don't respect the game enough or the fans who feel it is their sacred duty to protect it. Yeah, I was annoyed too with the decision to end the All-Star game, but I certainly could understand the reasoning behind it. Given the huge investment the MLB has in its stars, both financial and in terms of marketing, there's no way a pitcher was going to be overextended in this exhibition game. It just seems these "protectors of the game" look for any excuse they can to draw harsh comparisons between the game of today and the game of their youth, and they were out in force Wednesday morning. One fellow even said to me with fervor and a straight face that Ted Williams was "rolling over in his metal tube."

Puh-leaze! Wake up, folks! The game of your youth died nearly 30 years ago when Andy Messersmith was allowed to become the first free agent. Deal with it! All you're protecting is a long dead corpse. Baseball's still a great game, but a lot of your perspectives need to change. If you can't handle it, find a new passion.

Down to the wire

not looking at it that way.

"We want to win every game," he said. "I'd love to go in and steal one from Braintree or Milton, and if we've got our full lineup, I wouldn't be the least bit surprised to see that happen. I still say I'd put my best nine against anyone's top nine in the district."

Of course, this has been the problem for the Post 118 team. It started the season 3-0, but then went on a seven game winless streak, as several members of the team became unavailable due to vacation, injury or other commitments (the Appalachia Project alone stripping the team of four key players for over a week).

Fortunately, it appears a very real possibility that Arnold may be able to put the starting lineup he envisioned on Day One in the field for the last few contests, as a few players return from injury and regular leadoff hitter Greg Levin returns from a two week family vacation in Australia.

Post 118 finally pulled out long sought win number four last Wednesday, taking down Quincy, 4-3, on a solid complete game pitching effort from Jesse Cole (five hits, five walks, seven strikeouts).

Leadoff hitter Alex Knight legged out a pair of infield hits in the game, coming around to score after the first one and knocking home run number four with the second. The other two Scituate runs scored on a big two-run blast off the bat of Tim Straughn that easily cleared the right center field fences in the fourth inning.

Post 118 followed that up on Friday, nearly becoming the first team this season to knock off Braintree. A late inning misplay of a fly ball in the outfield led to the tying and game winning runs for Braintree, thereby squandering a great complete game pitching effort from Tom Fitzgerald, and a couple of hits and RBIs from third baseman Mike Gulinello.

Things completely fell apart on Sunday against West Roxbury, as Post 118 fell 16-3 to the playoff bound Post 78ers. With his shortest bench yet this year, Arnold was forced to let relief man Mike Snowdale start the game on the mound. The heavy hitting West Roxbury reached him for eight runs in the first inning, rendering the remaining 6-1/2 frames pretty much academic.

The Cohasset and Scituate boys bounced back with a much needed win on Monday, however, as they took out their frustrations on Stoughton, winning 12-4.

Chris Carr went most of the way on the mound to pick up the win.

"Chris did an excellent job of keeping the ball down, and getting us ground ball outs," said Arnold. "That kept the kids in the game defensively, and we had a few big plays in there too. Mike Gulinello made a few incredible stops at third base."

Eric Demahowski, Jesse Cole, Brian Woods and Jason Connelly all had multiple hit games with at least one extra base hit and RBI apiece.

"Everybody swung the bat well in that game," reported Arnold. "Even a lot of the outs were loud. Hopefully, this is the start of something we can build on."

Police are still investigating an attempted robbery in a strip mall off Route 3A.

Two thieves inadvertently set off the motion alarm in Mary Lou's News that foiled their burglary attempt in the early hours of Sunday morning (June 30).

Cohasset police say two white males pried open a rear window to South Shore Upholstery on the 100 block of King Street and gained access to ceiling rafters over the four businesses in the strip mall that also houses Aveni Cleaners, an antique shop and Mary Lou's News.

But officers James McLean and Jeffrey Trainor were nearby when they heard an audible alarm activate at Mary Lou's News, 132 King St.

When the officers stopped to investigate the alarm, the two suspects fled the building through the rear window they had pried open during the break, ran and jumped on two motorcycles they had apparently hidden in the bushes alongside the building.

The officers pursued the motorcycles into Hingham, where one of the motorcycle operators failed to negotiate a turn at the detour at 3A and Summer Street; the second motorcyclist crashed on Summer Street.

A lengthy foot chase ensued that included police from Cohasset and Hingham and the Hingham K-9 unit.

The manhunt was called off after several hours and the suspects are still at large. The motorcycles were recovered and returned to their owners. Police determined the motorcycles had been stolen days earlier in Londonderry, N.H.

Police obtained physical evidence at the burglary site and crash scenes where the operators had slid the bikes to a stop using the process of "laying the bikes down" and took off.

Nothing was taken in the break-in because police confronted the suspects within 20 seconds after they'd entered the building, police said.

Anyone with information, should contact the Cohasset police at 781-383-1055.

Juveniles arrested

Police arrested three Cohasset 16-year-olds at 7:46 p.m. Thursday, July 4 after a call about some suspicious activity in Parking Way, the town parking lot.

Police found the youths with two bottles of vodka, two bottles of rum, a 20-pack of beer and a quantity of marijuana. All the alcohol was unopened.

The teens, one of whom was charged with minor possession of alcohol and the other two were charged with possession of marijuana, were arraigned on the charges yesterday in Quincy District Court after the Mariner went to press. Police did not release their names because they are juveniles.

Scout restores historic Jacobs-Collamore cemetery

Troop 78 Eagle Scout candidate David Krueger of Cohasset has completed his Eagle service project by restoring the historic Jacobs-Collamore Cemetery located on Jacobs Trail in Norwell near Assinippi Corner. The cemetery had been overgrown by brush and littered with trash for most of the 20th century, but with the help of many volunteers, Krueger has succeeded in rescuing it.

A number of the area's original settlers are buried in this cemetery. In 1727, David Jacobs and his two sons, Joseph and Joshua, dammed up Third Herring Brooke to make what is now known as Jacob's pond. Dr. Joseph Jacobs later built a house on Washington St. The Collamore family, originally from Scituate, moved into this area and married into the Jacobs family. Members of both families were buried in what is now the Jacobs-Collamore cemetery. Although there is evidence of only a few graves at the site, several records of burials have been lost over the 300-year history of the cemetery.

Krueger's project consisted of directing the cleaning of debris from the cemetery property, enclosing the property with a boundary of large rocks on three sides, ringing the front with rustic-looking granite posts with hanging chains between them, planting of shrubs and flowers, mulching the frontal area of the lot and providing a public viewing area of walkway stones. All of this work was accomplished by fellow scouts, friends, local business people, town employees, and family volunteers under the direction of the candidate scout. The Norwell Historical Commission approved the work and also placed a large commemorative stone monument at the front of the cemetery property.

This project took more than one year to complete, and took more than 250 person-hours of volunteer effort. During this period, Krueger managed scouts from Troop 78 in Norwell and Troop 28 in Cohasset, as well as other friends and family in completing this huge project.

Russian organist at St. Stephen's

This summer, St. Stephen's Church presents Russian organist Mikhail Mishtchenko in a recital on Wednesday, July 24, at 7:30 p.m. Mishtchenko is a lecturer in music history at the St. Petersburg Conservatory and the author of numerous musicological publications. He graduated from the St. Petersburg Conservatory and has widely performed in Russia. The artist has a broad repertoire, with a special emphasis on music of the Romantic Period.

The concert will be played on the church's legendary 58-rank Aeolian-Skinner organ, with Mishtchenko performing works of Widor, Vierne, Franck, and Bach. St. Stephen's, with its magnificent instrument, will provide an excellent showcase for this great program.

St. Stephen's Church is at Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicap accessible, and there is ample parking at the village car park. There is no admission charge, but donations will be accepted. For information, call 781-383-1083.

Music Circus includes kids' fairy tales in its repertoire

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Tired of the beach or computer games? Again this summer, the South Shore Music Circus offers a variety of children's theatre programs that offer another alternative to keep the kids entertained while school's out.

The award-winning Kaleidoscope theatre program has been in existence for 25 years and has been bringing smiles to the faces of Cohasset's younger generation for the better part of 20 years. This year, the play group has a variety of different fairy tale musicals planned including Mother Goose, Snow White, Pinocchio, Cinderella, The Emperor's New Clothes, Beauty and the Beast, Jack and the Beanstalk, and The Frog Prince. While not all plays are performed every year, staples like Cinderella and Snow White can be caught most summers at the Music Circus.

David Payton, who writes and directs the plays for Kaleidoscope, said the live performances seem to be preferred by parents who are looking for an way to entertain their kids. He said there is always a moral message in the plays and each one encourages audience participation from both parents and their children.

"We want to get children excited about coming out to see us," he said. "We provide a great source of entertainment for them."

Chris Conway, public relations coordinator for the Music Circus, said the venue offers the programs as a service to the community and an alternative for parents who would like to enlighten their kids to arts. He said the Music Circus also keeps the prices low, about $6.50 a show, as a way to encourage attendance.

"It's a great way for us to provide our friends in the community a family friendly artistic experience in the middle of the day during the summer," he said.

Conway added the Music Circus has expanded the horizons of the children's program in recent years with the addition of the touring versions of popular Nickelodeon TV shows such as Little Bear, this year, and productions such as "Franklin's Magic Fiddle" in the past.

"We expect to continue this tradition next year with a touring version of 'Spongebob', one of the hottest shows in years," Conway said.

The plays, which normally run for an hour, are performed by actors ranging in all ages. Kaleidoscope also incorporates some people with special needs into its production.

"We always have age appropriate actors," Payton said. "It allows the kids to identify with the performers."

Kaleidoscope also performs in venues in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Cape Cod and also does school shows.

"We have an educational school touring group that promotes positive qualities in children," Payton said. "We try to get them to think about the values in their life." The group performs the play titled, "I'm Special, You're Special" which features a child with Down Syndrome.

The Music Circus registrations are held two weeks prior to the actual date of the show.

The following is the summer schedule for Kaleidoscope at the Music Circus.

- July 18 - Snow White
- July 25 - Pinocchio
- August 1 - Cinderella
- August 8 - The Emperor's New Clothes
- August 15 - Beauty and the Beast
- August 22 - Jack and the Beanstalk
- August 29 - The Frog Prince

Egodog does second tour of duty in the Balkans

By Seth Jacobson

Egodog, a band founded by Marshfield High School graduate Micheal McManus is celebrating America's birthday this month in a very special and patriotic way.

Having rung in the Fourth of July in the states, the band will take off for its second tour of the Balkans July 28 in support of military personnel serving abroad. The tour is dedicated to U.S. troops serving in Kosovo, Bosnia, Hungary and Macedonia. McManus said this second tour of duty for the band has a new significance in the wake of Sept. 11.

"Last time we did a tour like this (June, 2001), it was pre-Sept. 11," McManus said. "I'm really interested in seeing the morale of the troops when we go back. The main reason we go there is to try to keep the peace. In Bosnia, there's no cleanup going on. It looks like the war ended yesterday. It's really humbling."

And McManus noted that Egodog is not just doing this tour to pay tribute to troops in the Balkans. They're doing it to honor all U.S. military troops wherever they serve around the world.

"Unfortunately, it wasn't until Sept. 11 that many Americans really took note of the important job our troops are doing," McManus said.

And while the band's mission has become a patriotic one, Egodog didn't start out that way.

After McManus graduated MHS in 1983, he attended Berklee College of Music in Boston for two years. He followed that up by earning his degree in communications from UMass Amherst, just in case the music career didn't pan out.

At that time, McManus was playing music around Boston with a few of his friends. One day in 1991, one of his friends told McManus he was moving to Los Angeles. He asked McManus if he would be interested in moving out there.

"I pulled up my stakes, got in a van and went to California," McManus said. "It was just one of those crazy things you do when you're young." During his six years in California, McManus formed Egodog, recruiting several area musicians including vocalist Tony Oros, bassist Damien Pampena and drummer Joe Higgins. McManus plays guitar for the band.

"We've been together since 1997," McManus said. "It started as a project but now it has grown into something bigger."

The band has released three albums and while Egodog is not on a major label yet, that has not slowed the band's momentum. The members of the group book their own gigs, press their own albums and do their own publicity. McManus describes the band's style as modern hard rock.

By 2001, Egodog had been playing gigs on the West Coast and in places like Japan, Mexico and Germany. But the members of the band wanted to do something to give back to their country. So, after much deliberation, they decided to do a tour of the Balkans for the troops.

"We wanted to basically tell the troops over there and everywhere that they're doing a good job," McManus said. "None of the guys in the band have done any military time—this is the closest any of us have ever gotten to that."

While in the Balkans, the members of Egodog lived like the troops serving there. They ate in the mess halls and slept in the barracks. McManus said many of the band's military escorts were from Massachusetts and that made him feel at home.

"We did 13 different shows that tour," McManus said. "It was a real eye-opener for me. I think when we go back later in July, it will be even more interesting than the last time. When we're over there, we get a chance to see things 99.9 percent of Americans could never see. In places like Bosnia, we get to hear the stories from the locals about what really went on with the Serbs and the Bosnians. It gives us such an appreciation for what we have back home."

Egodog will return from the second Balkans trip in mid-August and return to its regular gigs again. But McManus said it isn't very likely that the band will make a trip to the East Coast.

"I'd love to play a gig at home, but we're a do-it-yourself band and we don't have a major label," he said. "We can't really afford to go all the places we want. I still have a lot of friends in Marshfield, so I still get all the updates. Thank God for e-mails."

While abroad, Egodog lived like the troops and boosted morale.

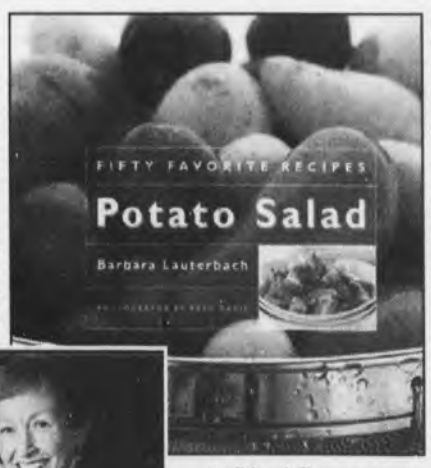
New cookbook peels away the competition

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Barbara Lauterbach remembers her childhood in Hingham, where summer tables were set with plenty of seafood, fresh vegetables and of course that New England staple, the potato. Lauterbach calls it the perfect, simple food.

Even during the ensuing years, while pasta salad became all the rage, this European-trained cook stuck by the tried and true spud.

In fact, Lauterbach is such a steadfast potato lover that she has published her first cookbook — just in time for summer cookouts and picnics — on one of the potato's most famous dishes, potato salad



Barbara Lauterbach

"Potato Salad: 50 Favorite Recipes" is perfect fo anyone who ever thought potato salad just couldn't keep up with its flashier side-dish competition — pasta salad. Lauterbach will be at the Front Street Book Shop in Scituate Harbor July 11 to sign copies of the book and offer a taste of some of its recipes.

"Actually, the germination for the idea for the book came around the Fourth of July, sitting on the front porch with a friend, who said I should write the book. At first I though it would be difficult to come up with enough ways to fill a book, it wasn't," said Lauterbach, who now makes her home in New Hampshire.

Lauterbach said that one of her favorite recipes — which she serves to her family every Fourth of July — comes from the New England staple dinner of salmon, potatoes and peas in a white sauce.

Lauterbach has brought the recipe up to date by creating a potato salad that uses these ingredients, but frees the cook up a little on Independence Day. Fabulous Fourth salmon and potato salad calls for new or Red Bliss potatoes, peas, poached salmon and hard-boiled eggs blended with dill, shallots, oil and lemon juice. Another recipe Lauterbach recommends for traditional New England clambakes is the slightly untraditional Portugese potato salad, which calls for Yukon Gold or Yellow Finn potatoes, oil and vinegar, linguica or chourico sausage, chick peas, mustard and anchovy paste.

Lauterbach said that many of the recipes came from family, other chefs that she knows and friends. She even has a celebrity potato salad section.

Lauterbach is a bit of a celebrity cook herself, having attended many cooking schools in London, Paris, Florence and Bologna. She was the director of the Creative Kitchen Cooling School at Lazarus, a division of Federated Department Stores in Ohio. She was also

Star's funny about getting serious in 'Road to Perdition'

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Move over, Ron Howard; Tom Hanks may be the nicest guy in show business.

At a recent series of interviews for his new film, "Road to Perdition," Hanks bounded from room to room and table to table, greeting everyone with a big, "Hey, how are ya this morning?" His enthusiasm was reminiscent of the boy-in-the-man's-body character he so brilliantly portrayed in "Big."

Hanks is now at the top of a profession that's won him fame (two best actor Oscars) and acclaim (at 45, he's the youngest person to receive the American Film Institute Life Achievement Award). Now he's taking his career in a new direction. But he's not the least bit concerned about whether his fans will follow him on the "Road to Perdition," a moody gangster film set in 1930s Chicago, in which Hanks plays his first gun-toting bad guy.

"I'm not worried about people accepting me in the part," he says. "They either do or they don't. I trust whoever sees the movie will become involved in what's going on. Beyond that, it's not really a marketing concern. It still comes down to the quality of the movie and the quality of the performance. I find that the audience is incredibly smart, and they make this organic decision themselves. And it's got nothing to do with any sort of strategy. It's whether or not they become involved in the story."

The story involves several layers of father-son relationships, with Hanks smack in the middle of two of them: He's the "adopted" son of — and hired hitman for — tough mobster Paul Newman, and he's the father of newcomer Tyler Hoechlin, who turns inward when he realizes what his dad does for a living.

Paul Newman and Tom Hanks in "Road to Perdition."

Hanks insists he didn't take the part just so he could try something new.

"I think that if you're looking for a specific change of pace just for the sake of changing the pace, you're making an artificial, inorganic decision," he says. Then he puts on an impish smile and adds, "I didn't tell my crack team of show business experts, 'FIND SOMETHIN'

Rethinking fruit salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Fruit salad is, to our discredit, a lackluster afterthought, a recipe that is thrown together willy-nilly with little or consideration for the proper dressing. Indeed, fruit salads do need to be dressed properly in order to heighten flavors, providing both depth and contrast. Simply put, there is nothing with more potential than a bowl of cut-up fruit ñ it cries out for a splash of sophistication.

I immediately turned to a simple dressing referred to as a gastrique which is nothing more than a reduction of an acid (e.g. vinegar) and sugar. It is most often used to accompany savory dishes such as duck but "Cook's Illustrated" turned to this recipe as a dressing for fruit salads. The basic method is to take 4 parts liquid (wine, champagne, citrus juice) to 1 part sugar and reduce it in a saucepan for about 15 minutes or until slightly thickened. I tested this approach on champagne, red wine, and white wine with good results; vinegar and fruit juices (orange, lemon, and lime) were too severe and sour. I did uncover one big problem in my tests. The cooking time reduced the fresh, complex flavor of the wines, a result that was disappointing.

The solution to this problem was discovered on a website that suggested caramelizing the sugar first and then adding the wine. In a small saucepan I placed 1/4-cup sugar with two tablespoons water and one teaspoon lemon juice, the latter included to prevent crystallization. Once the sugar had cooked for about five minutes I added one cup of wine which turned out to be excessive. I eventually cut back the wine quantity to a mere 1/3 cup which reduced nicely in just a few minutes which also preserved its delicate flavor.

The second discovery evolved from a mistake. I let the sugar overcook in one test ñ in turned a dark amber color ñ and the resulting flavor was deep and wonderfully complex especially when married to the wine. The final touch was flavorings ñ orange, lemon, or lime zest work well with champagne as does a bit of orange liqueur. When using red wine, either vanilla bean or cinnamon were nice additions. (They should steep in the hot liquid for at least 10 minutes but not more than a half hour.)

As for the fruit, it has to be both fresh and full-flavored. This dressing will help but it canít save tasteless melon or watery strawberries. Peaches, plums, or nectarines donít have to be peeled and can be sliced into 1/2-inch wedges. If youíre lucky enough to find a mango or papaya they should also be cut into 1/ 2 inch cubes. Halved seedless grapes as well as cantaloupe and honeydew melon are good candidates. Watermelon is best left to be eaten on its own since it quickly becomes soggy. Bananas are another fruit best left for another purpose. They rapidly turn soft and dark. The syrup dresses about six cups of fruit. The salad should be dressed very close to serving time but the fruit may be cut and chilled hours ahead of time.

FRUIT SALAD WITH CARAMELIZED WINE DRESSING

You can use strawberries, blueberries, blackberries, raspberries, seedless grapes, cantaloupe, honeydew, mango, papaya, peaches, plums or nectarines or any combination. Strawberries should be halved or quartered, grapes cut in half pole to pole, and other fruit cut into 1/2-inch pieces. Peaches, plums, and nectarines do not need to be peeled. The syrup may be made up to five days ahead of time and stored in the refrigerator but the zest should be strained out if leaving it for more than a couple of hours.

6 cups prepared fruit (see note above)
1/4 cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1/3 cup champagne, dry white wine or prosecco
Finely grated zest of an orange, lime or lemon (optional)
1 tablespoon orange liqueur (optional)

Place the sugar, lemon juice and two tablespoons water in a small saucepan over medium high heat. Simmer until dark amber colored, about five minutes. (Once the syrup starts to color, it will turn dark quickly. Take the saucepan off the heat, swirl contents, replace and repeat to control the caramelization process.) Off heat add the champagne or wine. Return to simmer and cook until slightly thickened and reduced to just under 1/4 cup, about 5 minutes. Stir in the optional zest and/or liqueur. Cool to room temperature before using.

RED WINE VARIATION

Substitute red wine for the champagne in the above recipe. Instead of the lime or lemon zest (the orange still works in this variation) flavor the syrup with 1/2 vanilla bean or a 3-inch piece of cinnamon stick. The bean or stick should be removed before serving or after one half hour if preparing the syrup ahead of time.

a spokesperson for the King Arthur Flour Company and at one time operated a bed and breakfast in New Hampshire, where she taught cooking classes and hosted culinary weekends.

Lauterbach, who has a BA in Art History and has two grown children, said she has always loved cooking.

"I have always thought cooking is a form of art and after attending cooking schools in Europe, my eyes were really opened to what food could be," said Lauterbach.

Although she grew up in Hingham on traditional New England comfort food, Lauterbach is well aware that today's cooks are busy and often multi-tasking.

"I think the good thing about this kind of a cookbook is it helps people who have busy lives break out of the box in one small way, in an easy way. None of these recipes take very long. I hope it perks up people's interest in a basic food and brings some standard recipes up to the 21st century," she said.

Along with the recipes — and while some are for casual picnics, some are more "glamorous," Lauterbach says, with names like "Potatoes Night Out." Lauterbach includes plenty of tips for making potato salad, from choosing the potatoes to how to boil them properly to how to serve beautifully.

Lauterbach recommends potatoes with a lower starch content, like Red Bliss, Yukon Gold or Yellow Finn, all-purpose white or fingerlings. Don't overcook your potatoes, Lauterbach stresses, cooking them about 20 minutes and testing them with a knife for doneness. When it comes to skins, Lauterbach leaves them on when cooking to help keep the shape and to retain nutrients.

When it comes to dressing the potatoes, there are really only two ways: mayonnaise or vinaigrette. Lauterbach's rules of thumb is when using mayonnaise, dress the potatoes when they are cold; when using vinaigrette, dress the potatoes when they are still warm.

Once you get that concept down, you can go in any direction. "Use your imagination," she said.

Lauterbach said the book has sold very well so far, and has entered it's second printing. "That's a lot of potato salad," she jokes.

"But I think it shows the interest people have in basic food that they can serve everyday," she said

And what's next for Lauterbach? Chicken salad, of course.

Lauterbach will sign copies of "Potato Salad: Fifty Favorite Recipes" at Front Street Book Shop in Scituate from 6 to 8 p.m. on July 11. Lauterbach will also be sharing cooking tips and samples of recipes from the book will be available for tasting. For more information call Front Street Book Shop at (781) 545-5011.

FABULOUS FOURTH SALMON AND POTATO SALAD

2 pounds Red Bliss or red new potatoes
1 cup shelled green peas
2 pounds salmon steaks, poached and flaked (see note)
fi cup sliced radishes
Lettuce leaves, red-leaf or Bibb
4 hard-boiled eggs, quartered

DRESSING

1/4 cup fresh lemon juice
1/4 cup chopped fresh dill
1 shallot, thinly sliced
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste fi cup extra-virgin olive oil

Cook the potatoes. When cool enough to handle, peel if desired, then cut into /-inch-thick slices. Place the potato slices in a large bowl and set aside.

To make the dressing, in a small bowl, whisk the lemon juice, dill, shallot, salt and pepper. Gradually whisk in the oil until an emulsion forms. Pour the dressing over the potatoes and toss gently.

Bring a saucepan three-fourths full of water to a boil. Add the peas and boil just until tender, between 2 to 4 minutes depending on the size. Drain and immediately place under running cold water to set the color. Drain well.

Add the flaked salmon, peas, and radishes to the potatoes and toss again.

Line a large serving platter with the lettuce leaves. Spoon on the salad and garnish with the hard-boiled eggs. Serve at once.

Note: To poach the salmon, place / teaspoons dried tarragon or 1 teaspoon fresh tarragon leaves, / teaspoon dried thyme or 1 teaspoon fresh thyme leaves, 4 or 5 sprigs of fresh flat-leaf parsley, 1 bay leaf, and 4 or 5 whole black peppercorns on a square of cheesecloth. Bring the corners together, and tie securely to make a bouquet garni. In a wide stainless steel or enamel pan, combine 3/4 cup each white wine and water, 1 teaspoon salt, and the bouquet garni. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat to medium, cover partially, and simmer for 10 minutes. Add the salmon steaks and additional water if needed just to cover. Butter one side of a piece of wax paper cut to the diameter of the pan and place, buttered-side down, over the salmon. Poach at a bare simmer just until the steaks flake when tested with a fork, about 10 minutes. Remove the salmon from the liquid and let cool. Remove and discard any skin and bones, then flake with a fork.

DARK FOR TOMMY TO DO!' It wasn't like that."

Nor does he agree that "Road to Perdition" is an example of what the trade papers call counter-programming — in other words, a serious adult movie opening at the time of the year when film fare is usually lighter (it premieres on the same day as "Halloween: Resurrection," "Reign of Fire" and "The Crocodile Hunter").

"If you're gonna let marketing drive the entire way the movie business works, I think it would be a demoralizing atmosphere for movies," he reasons. "You'd only see mindless movies from the middle of May to the middle of August, and you'd only see dark, depressing, serious movies from Labor Day to the week before Thanksgiving.

"And then all through Thanksgiving it'd just be happy puppet movies with a lot of bright colors and singing ponies," he adds, laughing. "If you actually think there is a time to release a movie versus another time, I think it's absolutely wrong. People are dying for a good movie to go see. And they'll show up to see it whenever it comes out."

Hanks leans forward, hand on chin, waiting for the next question. He seems excited to promote "Road to Perdition"; he genuinely seems to think it's a good movie. But he admits he didn't know that while he was making it. He never knows that.

"I think it's always a landmine," he says. "Are you gonna step on something and blow yourself up? Is it gonna have any reverberations anywhere? You don't have any idea. If you actually think like you're in the running for it, the chances are you're making 'Bonfire of the Vanities.'"

He laughs again, a little uneasily, at having brought up one of his few big flops, but segues smoothly into his own degree of involvement with each project.

"One of the things I found is that you can be too involved," he explains, his eyes going wide on the word "too." "The job of the actor, in many ways, is to stay aloof and separated from an awful lot of the Sturm und Drang that's going on. I think my job is to provide the director with whatever he or she really needs or wants from me. So when I eventually see the finished film, I see stuff that I've never seen before, and it's actually been reinterpreted in a completely different way. There's been esthetic choices that the director has made that he might have come to late in the game or that maybe he had from the very beginning, but I never even realized it because I was being manipulated by the son-of-a-bitch."

He smiles again, and the smile lingers as he's asked if, after all these years, acting is still a challenge.

"It's still fun," he says. "Something comes along and I still can't believe that they're asking me to do it, to play the role. I went into this because it's the best job in the world. The money's nice, the attention is more than anybody deserves. But it doesn't have anything to do with what happens when you get there and you put on the clothes and you're pretending to be something else and you work with other people who are inspiring and intimidating at the same time. It's still a blast."

Diverse textural plants for the shady border

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A strange, eerie haze blanketed South Shore gardens over the weekend as smoke laden breezes descended from our Canadian neighbors. It is difficult to comprehend the devastation that has resulted from the extensive blazes that have scorched so many areas of our beautiful country in recent weeks. As I gazed up at the orange-red orb in the midday sky, I was mesmerized by the peculiar appearance of this unfamiliar sun and the odd hues it cast. Visions of science fiction movies raced through my mind as I imagined myself transported back in time to a prehistoric land of volcanoes and dinosaurs or stranded on a far away planet. Despite the momentary appeal of overcast skies and a temporary respite from oppressive summertime weather, I will welcome the return of bright blue skies, sunshine and normal atmospheric conditions.

When heat and humidity prevail, I seek a cool retreat from the summertime heat in my shady borders. By early July, the shade garden becomes nearly tropical in its appearance. Handsome hostas have reached spectacular proportions, their blue, gold, green or variegated foliage offering season-long beauty. From diminutive mini-forms barely 6-inches high, to elegant giants nearly 4-feet tall with leaves more than a foot across, it is not surprising that these diverse, low-maintenance plants have become the most popular perennials cultivated in the United States. Tolerant of dampness or drought, hostas offer textural variations as well, from the glossy, satiny leaves of Ventricosa cultivars to the puckered, seersucker appearance of Tokudama types. The shiny leaves of 'Leather Sheen' or 'Invincible' appear to be made of wax, a marked contrast to the dull but brightly tinted foliage of 'Gold Standard' or the powdery blue, glaucous leaves of 'Halcyon', 'Dorset Blue', or 'Hadspen Blue'.

Although a shady spot could be elegantly designed using only hostas, additional plants that display feathery, ferny foliage create an exciting contrast in form and texture to the symmetrical mounds of hosta foliage. Perhaps the loveliest of all are the astilbes. Numerous cultivars are available and if several varieties are grown, the feathery blooms of astilbes will grace your borders from late June to mid-August with heights ranging from under a foot to a stately 4-feet tall. The exquisite, deeply divided foliage makes these perennials worthy of growing even if they did not produce glorious plumes in shades of pink, red, rosy-purple or white. Moisture-retentive soils are a must for their survival and a stressed plant will quickly demonstrate its thirst by wilting and turning crispy around the edges in a remarkably short time period.

Among the hybrids currently offered, the arendsii hybrids are particularly beautiful. Tall graceful plumes tend to bloom early in the season; the cultivar, 'Bridal Veil', is a sensational airy white, 'Cattleya' is a tall deep pink, and 'Montgomery' boasts fabulous red spires. Season extenders include the chinensis and simplicifolia hybridsAstilbe chinensis 'Pumila' can be used as a ferny groundcover, presenting short stiff, lavender-pink panicles late in the season. Astilbe chinensis taquettii 'Superba' offers yet another variation with strong, upright stems bearing vivid, narrow, purplish plumes later in the season; it withstands heat and drought better than many of its relatives. The simplicifolia hybrids, which include the lovely 'Sprite', present particularly dark, lustrous foliage and loose, pale pink spires.Equally appealing for their handsome, divided leaves, the bugbanes (Cimicifuga) are similar in appearance to the astilbes but generally exhibit greater stature providing an attractive backdrop for hosta, Ligularia, and turtlehead (Chelone). These hardy perennials prefer moist, well-drained soils in dappled to half shade. Several varieties of bugbane are available offering a progression of blooms from mid-July to early autumn. Cimicifuga racemosa produces tall white, fragrant wands that sway in the breeze, sometimes referred to as fairy candles, and provides a charming, delicate accent to the back of the border. New selections include 'Hillside Black Beauty' and 'Brunette' that exhibit stunning deep purple foliage and bloom later in the summer and C. simplex 'White Pearl' extends the season still further with white bottlebrush blooms in September and October.

A delightful addition to my shady borders in recent years, Corydalis lutea seems to bloom longer than any perennial I grow. From May to frost, clusters of tiny, bright yellow flowers are produced in profusion atop a delicate, foot-tall mound of blue-green foliage reminiscent of fringed bleeding hearts to which it is related. Bountiful seedlings appear in every nook and cranny, occasionally becoming a pleasant nuisance but these are easily removed when they become overly exuberant. A white form is also available. Corydalis flexuosa 'Blue Panda' is irresistible due to its intense turquoise-blue color but I have found this stunning perennial extremely finicky, usually going dormant during hot, humid weather and often succumbing to winter wetness Consistently moist but very well drained, light, humus-rich soils in semi-shade seem to be critical for success.

Ferns, bleeding hearts (Dicentra), epimediums and goatsbeard (Aruncus) are yet other delightful sources of textural contrast as are several shade-loving ornamental grasses including members of the predominantly evergreen Carex family and cascading Hakone grasses particularly Hakonechloa macra 'Aureola'. Add a few of the sensational new colorful coleus cultivars for a touch of pizzazz. There is a wealth of fabulous shade-loving plants on the market to create an attractive, appealing display rich in color and texture throughout the growing season.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10

The new moon culminates at 6:26 a.m., when the sun and moon align at 18-degrees Cancer. At this time the green light goes on for new beginnings across the board. Influences are favorable until 6:48 p.m., when the moon and Jupiter conjoin. Venus enters Virgo at 5:09 p.m., remaining there until August 7.

THURSDAY, JULY 11

Planetary activity sets the stage for a fun day. The Cancer moon aligns with Mars at 12:25 a.m. and becomes inactive until 3:08 a.m., when it enters playful Leo. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until tomorrow. A lunar opposition to Neptune this evening prompts you to forget your troubles and go for the good times.

FRIDAY, JULY 12

A Leo moon continues to generate an upbeat mood. This is a wonderful day for vacationing. Influences also rate high for launching ventures, making decisions. Plan to get new projects off the ground before 5:28 p.m., when the Leo moon aligns with Saturn. Kick back and enjoy life to the fullest this evening.

SATURDAY, JULY 13

The Leo moon opposes Uranus at 2:42 a.m. and becomes inactive. A practical Virgo moon takes over at 5:41 a.m. The weekend is favorable for tackling work or study projects. You can be most productive. Mars enters Leo at 11:23 a.m., remaining there until August 29.

SUNDAY, JULY 14

This day has its challenges. A positive, easygoing attitude is essential. Let go of situations that you have no control over. Keep your hands and mind busy with practical projects. The Virgo moon forms 90-degree contacts to Pluto in the morning and Saturn in the evening. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Get back on track with physical fitness and exercise routines.

MONDAY, JULY 15

The Virgo moon becomes inactive at 1:08 a.m., when it interacts with Jupiter. At 7:39 a.m. a Libra moon takes over, setting the stage for a pleasant, productive day. This is an ideal period for working out conflicts you have been experiencing with others. People will be outgoing and cooperative. Influences are also favorable for meeting people and developing new alliances.

TUESDAY, JULY 16

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. The moon continues active travel in Libra. You can make gains developing ventures that need moral or financial support from others. Creative projects also get the green light. Beautify your surrounds. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17

The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 12:47 a.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate in a week, July 24. The Libra moon becomes inactive at 6:58 a.m. At 10:13 a.m. the moon enters Scorpio, bringing a change of pace. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. This is a day to get things done. Stay upbeat and don't allow anyone or anything to throw you off track. A challenging lunar alignment to Mars occurs at 2:45 p.m. Use extra caution when driving or operating machinery.

THURSDAY, JULY 18

Take advantage of today's 'take care of business' mood. Don't procrastinate, because planetary action turns around completely tomorrow. Tackle jobs that need troubleshooting, problem-solving. You can get to the heart of a matter and work out the glitches. Make repairs, review and redo old projects. Influences are also favorable for making important decisions and starting new activities. Spend time alone; you can gain new insights to old problems.

FRIDAY, JULY 19

Astrological thunderstorms may occur this morning, when the serious Scorpio moon aligns with changeable Uranus at 10:34 a.m. and becomes inactive. Avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow. Relief arrives at 2:02 p.m., when the moon enters ebullient Sagittarius. In addition, the sun aligns with Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. Don't be a hermit tonight. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

Opening the door to Wilson House

Teen docents provide tours

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Walking through a historic town like Cohasset, one may wonder about the origin and significance of the buildings around town. Likely drawing the most curiosity would be one of the oldest structures in the village — the Captain John Wilson house.

"It's also nice to see young people taking an interest in the town's history."
— Kathy O'Malley, historical society

The Cohasset Historical Society museum on Elm Street is once again open for tours with high school students serving as docents.

"It's a great way for the kids to get involved with the community," said Kathy O'Malley, co-president of the historical society. "It's also nice to see young people taking an interest in the town's history."

There are eight teens working part-time at the 200-year-old house this summer with their wages. Their wages are covered by the

Runway clock ticking

Comment period ends on July 28

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Hingham and other South Shore residents have only 10 more days in which to submit comments about the Federal Aviation Administration's (FAA) environmental impact statement on a controversial proposal to expand Logan Airport.

Massport wants to add a new Runway 1432 there to reduce delays, but project opponents aren't backing off in their fight to keep that from happening based on concerns related to jet noise and pollution and the expected tripling of flights over the South Shore.

The South Shore Jet Pollution and Hingham's Jet Noise Task Force continue to oppose the project, which is also the object of two lawsuits.

One was filed in Suffolk Superior Court to lift a 1976 injunction blocking construction of a new runway and the other filed in Plymouth County by Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, and Revere challenging Massport's

Irked over 40B

Housing law needs work, group says

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There's another group forming in Cohasset.

This time, area residents are interested in changing Chapter 40B, a statute that sets a 10 percent goal of affordable housing for each community.

Michael Westcott of River Road believes that 40B is a well-intentioned law but is poorly crafted. To that end, Westcott is leading the effort to form a group to raise awareness and fight for the kind of housing and development that he feels Cohasset really needs. The group consists of about 15 residents and so far, has no town officials participating, he said.

"We truly hope our legislators will look at amending the law to meet its objectives and not simply serve wealthy developers," he said in an email interview. "Many of the loopholes need to be closed and some measure of control needs to remain in the local communities."

Courts, police break the language barrier

Hoping to preserve their water views

Neighbors object to expansion plans

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's a matter of perspective.

Architect Jim Sandell says the Royal Barry Wills house at 419 Jerusalem Road across from Deep Run does not fit with the numerous magnificent mansions along Cohasset's most renowned roadway.

Speaking for homeowners, Lisa and Leonard Kupsc, Sandell said plans to practically raze the ranch-like structure and replace it with an 8,500 square-foot grand Victorian style home would actually improve the view.

But don't say that to several neighbors, who would like the existing, ocean-front house — which allows them to see the horizon over its roof — to stay the same size.

"If you're not living on the water then this would be a very attractive home to look at."
— Robert Rechner, 401 Jerusalem Road

The Kupscs need a special permit for the house expansion because the structure would continue to encroach on side setback requirements on the garage side.

The crux of the matter before the Zoning Board of Appeals is whether the expansion is substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood – if it is, the board must deny the applicant zoning relief.

The neighbors say "yes" and the owners, say "no" about the "detrimentality" factor.

"In our view the neighborhood is not Deep Run," says Sandell about the houses across the street. "It's Jerusalem Road, which is a linear neighborhood." Sandell showed photographs of the homes along the entire length of Jerusalem Road, including an aerial picture. Many of the homes were built a century ago, he said.

He said when the "Ledges" estate sold back in the 1950s, Royal Barry Wills subdivided and built small Cape Cod-style houses that were not in keeping with the other homes along the roadway.

Sandell also provided photos with the new house superimposed

Town buys new senior van

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The seniors in town now have a fashionable way to get around Cohasset.

The Senior Center recently purchased a new eight-passenger van to replace the old one which was purchased in 1986. The van, which cost approximately $22,000 will be used for trips to the local grocery store, banks, churches and any other destination seniors may require.

Kathy Bryanton, the director of the Council on Elder Affairs, said the van is a terrific addition to the town.

"Many people don't realize Cohasset has no public transportation and it's almost impossible for someone who can't drive to get around town," she said. "This will help enormously."

The money for the van was appropriated by Town Meeting last fall. Bryanton said she wanted to especially thank all the voters at Town Meeting as well as Town Manager Mark Haddad and Finance Director Michael Buckley.

"Everybody has been so wonderful in helping to get us this van," she said. "I'm thrilled."

Early retirement

Retiring early is something most people look forward to. For two town employees that's become a reality. Because of an Early Retirement Incentive program offered by the state, qualifying town employees have the option of adding either five years of service or five years of age, or a combination of the two, to their records.

According to Finance Director Michael Buckley this is the equivalent of adding about 10 percent to an employee's pension. For some employees, the program would bump them up to the maximum pension which is 80 percent of their salary, a factor that might entice them to retire.

Town Manager Mark Haddad with Buckley's input, offered the incentive to two "group four" town employees, both firefighters. Group four includes firefighters and police officers. One firefighter has already accepted the opportunity and another is considering the offer.

The town will benefit from this program by being able to replace the two firefighters with two paramedics. This will allow Cohasset to bill Medicare and local hospitals more for services as paramedics are more qualified to administer medicine and provide higher levels of care. This jump in revenue from billing will offset the 10 percent pension that the town is required to pay.

"We'll save money through this program," Buckley said.

Budget issues

Police Chief Robert Jackson was before the Board of Selectmen on Tuesday to update board members on his budget addendum for FY03. Jackson anticipates going before fall Town Meeting to ask for approximately $70,000. The money would be used as follows:

- $20,000 for 20 portable radios
- $70,000 overtime caused by filling shifts while three officers are n the academy
- $13,800 for training shortfalls
- and minus $30,000 because Jackson intends to ask for one cruiser instead of two as was originally planned

Clarification on restaurant site

A news brief that appeared in last week's Cohasset Mariner warrants some clarification.

Joan Wilson recently purchased the Strawberry Parfait business and changed the name to the Pleasant Street Parfait.

The property where the business is located continues to be owned by Joseph A. Rosano.

Waterfield heads village work

Has worked with MBTA

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There are going to be a lot of changes in Cohasset in the next few years. The village will undergo a facelift and the MBTA will be running trains through the town on its way to pick up South Shore commuters. The James Brook Flood Control project should solve the town's drainage problems and the new town parking lot should provide ample space for shoppers to show off their new wheels.

The coordination, design, and implementation for the improvements will all be handled by the Waterfield Design Group which was recently awarded the contract to both the village revitalization work and the James Brook Flood Control project. The firm, located in Winchester, specializes in streetscape design.

"We are one of the few companies which only focuses on civil engineering and landscape architecture in equal measures," said Craig Miller, president of the company. "We understand the needs of public infrastructure development and are deeply experienced in all of the related elements that will be associated with this work."

Karen Fitzgerald, the chief landscape architect for Waterfield, said one of the benefits to her company taking over the design process from the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is that it brings a fresh set of eyes to the table.

"We are a superior design firm," Fitzgerald said. "We bring the right combination of engineering and design work which makes us unique in the industry."

Although it's a relatively new firm, Waterfield has experience working within communities. Among others, the design group worked on the Dennisport revitalization project, the Mattapan Square streetscape improvements in Boston, the Lowell Riverwalk in Lowell and the Fairfield Road reconstruction at the University of Connecticut at Storrs.

Waterfield has also worked on more than 25 different MBTA design and construction projects including the North Station Platform Extension, the Mansfield Commuter Rail Station, the Green Line (B line) Accessibility project and the Arlington Station reconstruction.

The design firm feels it can leverage the relationships it has formed with officials at the MBTA to help Cohasset obtain information where others would be "stonewalled or rebuffed."

"A lot of the projects we have done are similar in nature to this one," Fitzgerald said. "We look forward to working with the town on this."

The design group does nearly 90 percent of its work in the public sector and feels its staff is very experienced with integrating historical aspects and modern uses into a successful project.

"Our design team approaches each project with enthusiasm and a firm understanding of good urban design practices," the firm wrote in its proposal to the town. "Creating and revitalizing urban spaces where people live, work, shop and seek entertainment and recreation requires timeless creative ideas and solutions that will solidify and continue the identity of the place."

The firm is committed to listening to community input and plans to hold public forums in the next few weeks to give residents a chance to voice their opinions.

The firm will also have another link to the town, John Cavanaro.

While the design work of the project will be done out of Waterfield's home base in Winchester, the coordination, communication and will be handled through Cavanaro's Cohasset office.

Cavanaro is the president John Cavanaro Consulting, a consulting group, and will be the primary connection between the Waterfield and the community.

A resident of town, Cavanaro knows it will is both a rewarding and daunting task to be working on such a large project in the place he calls home.

"Before I decided to join the team I was very cautious about being in same town I'd be working in," he said. "But after meeting with Waterfield I felt very comfortable and know this will be a wonderful project."

Cavanaro is a civil engineer and will be working with the design group to help coordinate the various aspects of the large project. His firm has experience with public infrastructure design, development and construction. He promised he'd be very accessible to anyone in town who has questions.

"I'll be there for people," he said. "I'm the guy they want to come to with questions or concerns."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is pleased to have Waterfield and Cavanaro working on the projects in town.

"I don't think we could've picked a better group to do the work for Cohasset," Haddad said. "I'm looking forward to working with them for the next few years.

Haddad added he wants to give Waterfield a few weeks to look at the design plans for the village before it holds its first public meeting.

"We are certainly going to try to get as much public input as possible," Haddad said. "What the residents will see when this is all over is very important."

No arrests yet in Logan case

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

As of yesterday when the Mariner went to press, police still had made no arrests in the apparent home invasion at Polly Logan's Nichols Road home on July 1.

Police Chief Robert Jackson said he has two detectives working on the case.

The perpetrator or perpetrators, who stole jewelry, silver and Logan's car, tied Logan up and left her in an upstairs bedroom where she remained during an oppressive heat wave for upwards of 36 hours. Logan, 77, who was suffering from dehydration, was found some 36 hours later by a handyman, Danny Adams, who called 9-1-1.

Police won't say whether Adams is a suspect. He has been cooperating with the investigation.

"We haven't ruled anyone in and we haven't rule anyone out."
— Police Chief Robert Jackson

"We haven't ruled anyone in and we haven't rule anyone out," Jackson said Tuesday.

But Logan's children, Matthew and Martha Logan, took out a temporary restraining order against Adams July 5 while their mother was still in the hospital.

Logan, who has been released from the hospital, was in court Monday with her daughter and several friends for support, where the judge continued the restraining order for a year that orders Adams, who has been staying intermittently at Logan's house, to stay off her property and to have no contact with her. Adams is allowed to go on the premises in the company of a police officer to get his belongings, Jackson said.

Yarmouth police have made two arrests on recent home invasions of elderly residents there. Jackson said, "at first look" the Yarmouth incidents don't appear to be related to the Logan case, however, he reiterated police aren't ruling anyone out.

"We've had no break through yet in the case and we are looking into various leads," he said.

Martha Bernard Welsh, a friend who accompanied Logan to court, said Logan was doing well.

"She's been through an awful ordeal," Welsh said. "She and her family are both heartened by the tremendous outpouring of support and well wishes."

Runway clock is ticking

environmental findings.

Now's the time for residents to air their views on the proposal, says State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham.

There will be an open comment period until July 28, during which residents can voice their opinions either for or against the project.

Bradley, Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and other legislators, along with a number of communities —including Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset — want to halt the project.

The FAA claims air traffic congestion would be relieved by the construction of a new runway.

Bradley is asking residents to either submit written comments to him, which he will forward as a package to the FAA, or to write on their own to:

John C. Silva, Manager of Federal Aviation Administration Environmental Projects, Airport Division, ANE-600, New England Region, 12 New England Executive Park, Burlington, MA 01803.

The FAA will issue a final record of decision once the comment period ends.

Copies of the environmental impact statement are available through Massport or the C.A.R.E. (Citizens Against Runway Expansion) web site: www.stop1432.com.

Bradley is also interested in receiving copies of comments submitted to the FAA by residents.

"It's important for the FAA to hear from those in the Hingham and Cohasset area who will be affected by the runway," he said.

Some say Massport and the FAA are being short-sighted in not coming up with a more viable solution for what they consider a regional transportation problem.

A few weeks ago, the FAA supported a "compromise" plan which would limit the runway's use to days when winds from the northwest cause delays on other Logan runways.

However, opponents aren't satisfied with that alternative, either, because they say there are no guarantees use of the runway will be limited to those conditions.

While project opponents remain hopeful they can halt the runway plan, Massport Spokeswoman Barbara Platt recently told the Hingham Journal she believes the project "will stand on its own merits."

In April, Hingham Town Meeting voters supported a warrant article calling for appropriating an additional $100,000 to oppose the project, bringing the town's total to $178,500.

Cohasset has put $78,500 toward the fight.

Neighbors of 419 Jerusalem Road, shown here, are upset about plans to tear the house down and a build a much bigger home at the ocean-front site.

to show the view would not be obstructed from the homes at Deep Run which are on higher land and are setback from the road.

He did agree, however, the ocean view from the road itself would be obstructed by the new house.

Karen Kirkendall, a Realtor for 16 years who sold the house to the Kupscs, said everyone of the half dozen people considering buying the house planned to tear it down. She said the value was in the land

According to the deed, the Kupscs paid $1.75 million for the property back in the fall of 2001. The lot is 30,100 feet or two-thirds of an acre.

Robert Rechner, 401 Jerusalem Road, said it's not the looks of the house that's the problem.

"If you're not living on the water then this would be a very attractive home to look at," he said.

Rechner took issue with Deep Run being depicted as not part of the neighborhood.

"I grew up there and consider Deep Run as part of the neighborhood," he said. "We didn't just play on one side of the street."

Richard Sears, 17 Deep Run, brought his own photographs which he said showed his view would be obstructed by the proposed house.

Sears also brought an attorney, Peter Eely of Quincy, who also questioned whether the Kupscs were in fact razing the house and therefore, would need a variance for the new structure because it would lose its grandfathered status as "preexisting, non-conforming." The tests for a variance are much more difficult to meet than those for special permits.

The Kupscs plan to leave the existing walls of the basement below the garage and breezeway, as well as northerly footing and most of the basement slab.

Eely argued that saving a basement wall and footing does not qualify the project as an alteration, when it is really a tear down.

He urged when the board interprets the bylaw "not to throw common sense out with the wind."

"To try to characterize this as an alteration of an existing structure is quite a stretch," Eely said.

The neighbors are also concerned about loss of property value with any loss of view.

The board closed the hearing and took the matter under advisement.

"This case is going to involve quite some deliberation on our part," zoning board chairman Woody Chittick said.

DiNero's wants to expand

Traffic, parking lot proposal irk abutters

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

No one is arguing about the quality of DiNero's. Even neighbors and abutters say the Hull Street restaurant near West Corner is a fine place to dine.

But plans to expand the restaurant and parking lot that would also involve the removal of a substantial amount of ledge brought a handful of neighbors out to Town Hall on a stormy Monday night this week.

Some of the neighbors are newcomers, who recently bought new homes whose yards abuts the back of DiNero's property where the new parking area would be located., while others have lived in the area for years.

John Fairchild has lived in his Jerusalem Road home about three weeks and is a direct abutter, whose house is above and to the back of the restaurant. If the ledge is removed to make way for the new parking area, there would be a 25-foot drop off at the edge of his yard, Fairchild told the Zoning Board of Appeals.

"The ledge, trees and bushes provide a buffer," Fairchild said, noting the parking area would create more noise and light pollution in the neighborhood.

DiNero's would also like to expand the restaurant building, whose front-yard setback is nonconforming; add signage; and have parking spaces that are slightly shorter than required – all of which may require zoning relief, and therefore, gave the Zoning Board a lot to consider. The board continued the hearing until Monday, Aug. 12.

"I've been here about four years and the traffic has doubled."
— Hollis Hunnewell, 796 Jerusalem Road

The narrower parking "stalls" – 19 feet as opposed to the required 20 feet – would allow space for the addition of a three-foot wide green strip along the front of the parking lot along Hull Street, DiNero's representatives told the board.

Plans are to add another DiNero's sign to the side of the proposed new addition facing the parking lot. The total square footage of the two signs would be less than the 40 square feet maximum allowed in the bylaw. But the bylaw talks about one sign, not two.

The building addition would increase the seating in the restaurant from 70 to 93. The current parking lot has 36 spaces – more than the 31 needed (one space for every three seats), but the existing lot is congested. Some of the restaurant's existing spaces are undersized, at only 7-1/2 feet wide. All the spaces in the newly reconfigured and redesigned lot would be 9-1/2 feet wide, the restaurant said.

DiNero's wants to expand the parking lot more than 40 feet into the ledge; reconfigure the existing spaces; and design a new traffic pattern to make the parking lot safer. If approved, the new parking lot would have a total of 39 parking spaces, and 48 with valet parking on site. With valet parking, the cars could be "stacked" end to end.

Zoning Board member Jane Goedecke tried to sum the parking situation up for the board.

"They have sufficient parking under the bylaw but not in the practical sense," she said. Goedecke explained while DiNero's has the spaces, they are not necessarily big enough.

One big hurdle for DiNero's is removal of the ledge, which restaurant representatives estimate at about 2,600-2,700 cubic yards. The bylaw doesn't allow more than 10 cubic yards to be taken off site – the rest has to remain on site, zoning board chairman Woody Chittick said.

Hollis Hunnewell, 796 Jerusalem Road, said West Corner has become a very congested place.

"I've been here about four years and the traffic has doubled," he said, pointing out the Avalon Bay added hundreds of apartments just up the road in Hull and the Greek church is planning a community center.

"To get across Route 228 or Jerusalem Road during rush hour can take five minutes," he said, describing the traffic situation as a "nightmare."

James Reichardt, 3 Grace Drive, a direct abutter to DiNero's said he shared the same concerns about traffic and blasting ledge. He said the height of the remaining ledge would be very dangerous even though DiNero's has proposed a chain link fence..

The storm hits. The power's out. But you're on.

Special Report

A matter of interpretation

Area courts deal with growing language barrier

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Hingham District Court on Summer Street may be a long way from its counterparts nearer Boston and other cities when it comes to handling the non-English speaking population, yet it is a microcosm of a growing need everywhere.

As America — and the South Shore — become increasingly diverse, more people for whom English is not their primary language are intersecting with the justice system on some level, whether as victims, witnesses or defendants. Added to the confusion and bewilderment of not knowing the language are cultural differences that can often include coming from a country with a very different legal system

Enter the court interpreter, who, in this state, is highly trained and increasingly in demand. The service they provide, however, is under pressure due to the state's fiscal crisis.

According to the 2001 Annual Report on the State of Massachusetts Court System, there were 57,361 requests for court interpreter services last year — 10 times more than the 5,718 requests in fiscal year 1994. The "requests" can represent several cases because interpreters are often called to court to handle two, three or more cases on a particular day. The annual tab for interpreter services has reached in the range of $4 million, which is picked up by the Massachusetts taxpayer.

Justice of the Superior Court Isaac Borenstein says the huge jump in requests for interpreters doesn't necessarily reflect an increase in immigration, but a rise in people accessing interpreter services.

"Judges, lawyers and people are more sensitive," he said. "In the past, we may have said, 'we can get by.'"

Due process — or fair legal proceedings — is the cornerstone of the American judicial system. Someone who does not understand what is occurring in the court is not being treated fairly, Borenstein said.

"Even when we think of a criminal defendant," he said. "Do we really want our system of justice sending people to prison without understanding what happens in court?

"My feeling is we would have no confidence in the system; it would affect our level of trust."

Robert M. Greenspan, a court-appointed attorney based at Hingham District Court, said over the past 10 years, there's been "less willingness to rely on somebody's cousin" to provide interpretation in legal proceedings.

"Justice has shown people's cousins don't do a good job," he said.

While Greenspan says by far the most people entering the justice system were born in the United States and speak English — it is not unusual to encounter someone who can't speak English.

To keep the costs down in Hingham, Greenspan explains cases requiring interpreters are conducted one or two days a month. Hingham District Court, which serves Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Rockland and Scituate made 86 requests for interpreter services from July 2001 through April 2002.

The Office of Court Interpreter Services (OCIS) that is part of the Massachusetts Court System handles requests for interpreters, and screens and certifies the interpreters themselves.

"Interpreter services are no longer seen as a luxury, but a necessity," said Gaye Gentes, manager of the OCIS which merged with the Judicial Language Center three years ago and now covers all 140 courts across the entire state.

"We can no longer say to the secretary in the judge's lobby, 'you speak Spanish — can you help us out?'," Gentes said.

35 languages

The OCIS has 160 interpreters on the list that provide translation in about 35 languages ranging from Spanish and Portuguese to Russian and Khmer (spoken by Cambodians). The OCIS has four full-time interpreters with the go-ahead to hire seven more with the rest covered by vendors on a per-diem basis at the rate of $160 for a half day or $250 for a full day. There are another seven full-time interpreters, who work directly with individual courts in Lowell, Roxbury and Springfield.

"Of course there's a cost, but a lot of constitutional rights come with a price to us. Hopefully, that makes us a better place in the world."

— Superior Court Justice Isaac Borenstein

"The worst case was when we had to find someone who spoke Dinka," Gentes said about a tribal language spoken in Sudan. "We also had to scramble to find someone who spoke Romanian with the credentials and experience we needed for a trial."

In those cases the OCIS might contact an interpreter agency such as the National Association of Judicial Interpreters or call a hospital that might have medical interpreters or contact a university.

Most requests to the OCIS are for Spanish, Portuguese, Vietnamese, Russian, Polish, Cape Verdean Creole, Haitian Creole, Chinese (Mandarin and Cantonese) and Khmer, Gentes says.

Interpreters must be proficient in English and a foreign language, be cross-culturally aware and pass the State Court Interpreter Certification test.

They must hold a bachelor's degree and have a minimum of four years experience in legal, technical, medical, literary translation or equivalent education or experience. Interpreters must also be able to interpret in the simultaneous mode and consecutive mode in court related proceedings.

Norma Rosen-Mann, who was born in Honduras, has been a Spanish interpreter for the Massachusetts court system for six years.

She explained using simultaneous or consecutive translation depends on the type of proceeding going on. In a trial, for example, when interpreting for a witness, the interpreter lets the speaker finish and then translates. But for a defendant who is speaking to his attorney, the interpreter would translate simultaneously.

"If someone is uneducated and uses bad grammar, we have to interpret that way," she says. "And the same goes if the attorney or judge uses highly academic language." Interpreters must also use the same inflections in their voice as the one they are interpreting for.

Rosen-Mann says most non-English speaking people who find themselves in the court system are frightened and confused.

She interpreted for a father in a domestic violence case for spanking his son harshly. The man didn't understand why he was in court because in his country, men are considered the sole master of the home and "owners" of their children.

Rosen-Mann worries with cutbacks in funding for the courts, interpreter services could be slashed. The courts are not immune to the state budget crisis with the proposed pool of money available to the central court cut some $1.6 million.

"Due process is at risk, along with speedy trials and help with restraining orders and emergency situations," she said if interpreter services are not adequately funded.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said despite the cuts, he hopes interpreter services won't be slashed. This year money for the central court account won't be separated out into line items by the Legislature — a change that gives the court discretion to spend the money where it needs it, he said.

"It's up to the court system to see if interpreter services are a priority," said Bradley, a former assistant district attorney in Plymouth County. "It's up to the court to see where it wants to spend the money, although it will be dealing with less money overall."

Bradley said cuts in interpreter services cost the taxpayer more money in the long run. The vast majority of cases are resolved before trial but there could be problems later, if a defendant doesn't understand his rights.

"A plea could be vacated if he claimed he didn't understand what was being said, and the process would start all over again," Bradley explained.

Greenspan, who also has a private law practice in Hull, says people may think interpreter services cost too much money.

"Try to imagine going to trial somewhere where everything was being conducted in a language you don't understand," he said. "It would not be fun."

Greenspan, who also practiced 14 years in Washington D.C., recalled a homicide case there when a detective, who spoke pretty good Spanish but it was not his first language, tried to provide the interpretation.

"During a tape recording of the suspect's confession," he said. "The detective was supposed to say, 'if you do not have an attorney, one will be provided for you.'

"But what he actually said was, 'if you don't have an attorney, one will be prohibited.'

"That's why we should use real interpreters," Greenspan said.

Borenstein, the Superior Court Justice, is also worried about potential cuts to funding the OCIS.

"So far the crisis is being dealt with amazingly well, in other words no one is saying no, you can't have an interpreter," he said. However, courts are being told interpreters are only available before 1 p.m. — which can lead to delays.

Borenstein points out interpreters services are not just for wrongdoers.

"What if you were a victim and the witness to the assault didn't understand the language, should we say — 'Sorry, we can't give you an interpreter.'"

He says it's paramount that our justice system be fair to all.

"We are a nation of immigrants that needs to provide interpreter services for people," Borenstein said. "Of course there's a cost, but a lot of constitutional rights come with a price to us.

"Hopefully, that makes us a better place in the world."

Telephone translation provides tool for police

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

What can police officers on the South Shore do when they find themselves in the situation where a suspect, witness or victim doesn't speak English?

Weymouth Chief Rodney Rumble says years ago police went around trying find someone who could help out.

"But that's not practical at 3 a.m.," he said..

Nowadays help is only a phone call away through Language Line Services, a California-based company that got its start 20 years ago as a volunteer service to help police and firefighters in San Jose, Calif. with the increasing number of Spanish- and Vietnamese-speaking citizens.

As part of the Greater Boston Police Council, a professional organization that offers collective procurement for its member police departments and agencies, area police departments are already "subscribers" to the service that costs $2.50 a minute. (Some police departments may engage additional translator services).

According to Evan Ollinger of Language Line, the officer calls the service's 800-number — or has dispatch call if he is on the road — and within eight seconds is connected to an interpreter. The company offers interpretation 24-hours a day in some 150 languages and employs 2,000 fully trained interpreters.

"We use the same training guide as the California 9-1-1 dispatchers," Ollinger said.

He explained there is a need for the service in virtually every police department.

"A rural department might use us once a month, and a major metropolitan department every hour," he said.

In 2001, the Greater Boston Police Council, which handles the billing for its 309-member departments, used the Language Line a total of 811 times, for languages ranging from Russian (338 calls) to Bosnian (11 calls). More than half the calls (442) were for a Spanish interpreter. The average length of a call was just over seven minutes.

The Language Line Services identification card divides languages by region. The officer makes his best guess as to what region the non-English speaking person is from, then shows him the card and asks him to point to his language.

Here's how it works. The officer has a language identification card provided by Language Line to help identify what language a person speaks. The languages on the card are grouped by region, such as Asia, Europe or the Middle East. The officer makes his or her best guess as to the region where the person is from, opens the language ID card to that section, and shows the person the languages listed. The message underneath each language tells the non-English speaker to point to his or her language and that an interpreter will be called.

The officer then calls the Language Line number, gives a client ID number, his organization's name and personal code, says which language is needed, and then is connected with an interpreter.

Officer Kevin Collins of the Braintree Police Department says the department uses the service a few times a month on average, mostly for booking prisoners. He says once connected to an interpreter, the process can be a little cumbersome because it involves telling the interpreter the question, passing the telephone to the non-English speaker and then listening to the translation, and so forth.

"There's a lot of back and forth," Collins said. "But there is no other way around it."

Collins says Braintree officers do not use the Language Line on the road because it would tie up the police radio for too long. In that case the non-English speaking person would be brought to the station. "It's always used in the station," he said.

But Ollinger says Language Line can help in emergency situations, at the scene, with arrests and interrogations. It can also translate Miranda rights. He explained that more and more officers are carrying cell phones, and speaker phones can also be used so the phone doesn't have to be passed back and forth. But no matter what technology is employed – interpreters can be invaluable, he said.

"Essentially, if you can't break the language barrier, you can't help someone," he said.

Ollinger said the service is "pay as you need." Police and public safety subscribers are set up in a special way to get the highest priority access, he said. The company also offers its services to businesses and individuals.

"If you wanted to interview someone who didn't speak English, you could call us up and use your credit card," he said. "Anyone can call us up."

Ollinger said Language Line gets about 20,000 calls a day from public safety personnel and handled 1 million emergency 9-1-1 calls in 2001.

"We've helped deliver babies, saved lives and helped officers in life-threatening situations," he said.

Rumble, the Weymouth police chief, said the service is an important tool.

"There is a cornucopia of different languages out there," he said. "If you can't communicate you have a serious problem.

"And in terms of time, it's cheaper than having to go search for someone to translate," he said.

Eight-year-old hits the books

Wins bike in reading contest

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

Even though it's summer vacation, eight-year old Alec Hurd still has seven or eight books on his nightstand.

"It's really fun to read now," he said.

Alec, whose love of reading was inspired this school year by his second-grade teacher Rose Collins, is often in the middle of several books at any one time. Whether it's Harry Potter's latest magical adventure, a book about sharks or a "how-to" about chess, Alec enjoys reading.

He'll be entering third grade in the fall, but Alec's mother, Karen Hurd, said her son's reading level is a grade ahead of his classmates.

Alec's interest and hard work were rewarded recently when he won a bicycle and helmet through Dependable Cleaners' Read to Ride summer reading program. This was his second summer competing in the program, now in its fourth year.

Karen said contests like this have helped to maintain her son's interest in reading.

"We try to make it fun for him," she said.

Though he already has the bike, Alec said one reason that he keeps reading is to win the program's grand prize — a trip for four to Disney World — to be drawn July 22.

The Read to Ride program, which ended July 19, encourages children ages 6-15 to read throughout the summer. According to Kirsten Bunszel of Tiffanie Williams & Co., which is working with Dependable Cleaners, more than 4,000 contest entries have been submitted at the 16 Dependable locations in the greater Boston area, with three winners being drawn each week.

Reading has sparked Alec's imagination and creativity outside of the pages, as well. His interests in writing and drawing have resulted in small books he's created. Alec has written stories about everything from family vacations to imaginary worlds.

After reading a book about dinosaurs in Mrs. Collins' class, Alec took a dinosaur dig kit he was given for his seventh birthday and turned his backyard into an archaeological site. With his paintbrush, hammer and safety goggles, Alec spent every day for a month in the backyard, chipping away at rocks and searching for fossils.

Though his parents insist he reads for half an hour a day, Alec said he usually reads for more than that. If he wakes up early in the morning, he often reads instead of going back to sleep or watching cartoons.

As for the rest of the summer, Alec also plans to enter a reading contest sponsored by the Boston Red Sox, one of his favorite baseball teams. To keep up with the Sox and his other favorite baseball team, the New York Yankees, Alec reads daily the sports section of the newspaper, a habit instilled in him by his father, according to Karen.

Alec hopes to be a baseball player for the Red Sox when he grows up. But if the baseball dreams don't come true, Alec said he also would like to be an archaeologist or a writer.

A small world

No one is more aware of our shrinking world than the Massachusetts Court System which has seen requests for interpreter services skyrocket over the past several years. Our local police departments are also running into situations where the victim, witness or perpetrator does not speak or understand the language.

Before you say "send them all back," just imagine for a moment that you are travelling overseas and are the victim of a crime. Wouldn't you want access to an interpreter to help you explain what had happened?

The fact of the matter is the face of the South Shore, Massachusetts and the United States is changing. It's really nothing new, after all, we are a nation of immigrants, who over time have adapted to the language and culture.

Our "melting pot," if you will, has enriched our country by bringing us Mexican, Chinese and Italian food and restaurants, Latin music – not to mention political leaders, soldiers, hundreds of thousands of new businesses, countless workers and families who come here to pursue the American dream and want to make a contribution to our society.

We recall a mother sharing with us the story about her son who was the first grade in a local school. The boy was bewildered when his teacher asked the pupils what nationality they were. Some proudly said Irish, others said Italian, Polish or English, and so on. When it was his turn, the little boy said, "I don't know about the rest of you – but I'm American!"

We're all proud of our heritage and rightly so. But we should also be accepting of those "newcomers" who come to America for the same reasons our forefathers did.

Our justice system is founded on fairness. To that end, courts and law enforcement officials must provide access for non-English speaking people.

Part One, Article 11, Declaration of Rights, Constitution of Massachusetts adopted in 1780 states, "Every person ought to obtain right and justice freely, and without being obliged to purchase it; completely and without denial, promptly and without delay..."

But there is a cost for equal justice. Justice of the Superior Court Isaac Borenstein described the line item for court interpreter services, which he sees as being a critical service, as a "budget buster."

But the past practice of "getting by" by using a cousin, relative, secretary or whomever could be found is not adequate. Evan Ollinger of Language Line Services, that provides interpreters for police and public safety personnel, says using non-qualified interpreters can lead to trouble.

He explains what one often finds is a younger person, who understands English, translating for an older relative.

"In some cultures, a younger relative can't give bad news and won't tell the older person," Ollinger says, adding that can be problematic in a life-threatening situation.

In a special report this week, we have tried to shed light on the use of interpreters in the courts and on the police beat. We learned highly-trained interpreters provide a valuable service, one that is becoming an integral part of the administration of justice.

Justice Borenstein put is best.

"We are a nation of immigrants that needs to provide interpreter services for people. Of course there's a cost but a lot of constitutional rights come with a price to us," he says.

"Hopefully, that makes us a better place in the world."

Irate about Delahunt vote

TO THE EDITOR:

Hon. William Delahunt,
Member of Congress

I see you voted for the Aviation Capacity Expansion Act, which would effectively remove State control over building new runways at existing airports. I am absolutely appalled! This is a flagrant power grab by the Congress in the name of regulating Interstate Commerce, and in all likelihood is unconstitutional. This could allow the construction of Runway 14/32 at Logan, in direct opposition to the interests of your own constituents in Hull, Hingham and Cohasset, to the Mayor of Boston, and possibly even to the Governor of the Commonwealth.

You folks in the Government should better understand the intensity of feeling surrounding airport expansion. While I don't recommend action as extreme as taking hostages, as the Mexicans are doing, they recognize they are being screwed over — being offered a pittance for their land, when the economic benefits of expansion will produce profits to pay them handsomely.

It is perfectly clear that the external economic costs of airport expansion, which include property devaluations, impacts on health (increased cancer risks from unburned jet fuel, sleeplessness, high blood pressure) and general quality of life are being ignored because of the perilous financial condition of the airline industry. Yet individual airlines continue to schedule half empty flight during peak periods in attempts to maintain market share, causing the delays which the Expansion Act purports to manage..

The agenda of the Air Transport Association is to lay an additional 50 miles of concrete at existing airports to compete more effectively with highway and rail transportation. Expansion of the 30 largest commercial airports in the country is not the answer, not in Chicago, not in Boston, not in San Francisco, nor in Oakland (where the environmental impact statement filed by the airport was recently rejected by the courts, having been found to be intentionally inaccurate and misleading for not having dealt with the external costs of expansion).

Peak period pricing and high speed rail are the answers, as well as the increased use of local, underutilized airports by the smaller regional jets.

You are the one that told me the Congress is being hit from all over the country by irate citizens fed up with the noise and pollution from airplanes, and that you probably have the votes to stop every airport expansion project in the country. What happened? Caved into business pressure ? To the 43 lobbyists on contract, and 27 in-house lobbyists on the payroll of the air transport industry?

'For love of the town'

TO THE EDITOR:

How ironic that discussions concerning selling the naming rights to the Town-owned, Town Meeting-funded new baseball fields should occur at the time of the passing of arguably the most generous resident Cohasset has ever had.

Jane Cook's motivation was purely for the love of the town, with no desire of recognition for her many good works. Many people, who have no idea who she was, benefit from her largesse every day.

Chernobyl benefit

TO THE EDITOR:

Dear Cohasset seventh and eighth graders, your teachers and your parents,

As host parents of two boys from the Chernobyl region of Russia we want to thank you all for your enthusiasm and support. Your planning and hard work certainly resulted in a successful social event and we enjoyed being part of your evening. The money that you raised will not only allow us to take these young boys many places and send them home with warm clothes for the winter months, but will also go to help defray the costs for next year's children. We have told the boys about all of you and what you did for them and now we hope that you will drop by to meet them.

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Recreation Commission and the youngsters and staff of the Summer Playground Program, I would like to express our appreciation for the Cohasset Police Department and the Cohasset Police Association for their very generous donation of time and effort and for their interest in our community.

On Friday, July 12, the Cohasset Police Department and the Cohasset Police Association organized and ran their annual Police Safety Day for the youngsters in the Playground Program. They arranged various activities, which all the children thoroughly enjoyed. The children were enthralled by the two helicopters and many other bona-fide police equipment that was available for them to experience. The Cohasset Police Department and Association further extended themselves to our community by providing a cook-out for all who were present, about 250 people total.

The commissioners and staff of the Recreation Department and the youngsters involved in the Playground Program truly appreciate their continued interest in and concern for our community and its residents. I believe that I am able to speak on behalf of the residents with children in the Playground Program, in thanking the Cohasset Police Department and the Cohasset Police Association.

New library to open early 2003

By Patience G. Towle and Sheila S. Evans
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Slowly but surely, the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library is taking shape! While much of the work to date has been hidden inside, installation of the new windows and the new cupola sitting on the ground on Ripley Road give promise of the beautiful building it is going to be. The Library Building Committee has been meeting weekly to make ongoing construction decisions and to finish selecting fabrics and furniture for the new library. The contractors report that an early 2003 opening looks realistic.

New gifts welcome

As is well known, this exciting addition to the Town of Cohasset has been based significantly on the generous gifts of several hundred persons who have contributed a total of more than $1.1 mil lion to the project. New gifts have been received on a slackened, but continuing basis since the town-wide mailing in April of 2001. While the Library Building Fund has received pledges for more than the $1.1 million promised to the Town, additional gifts are most welcome and will be judiciously used for landscaping, computers and other electronic equipment, as well as establishment of a fund that will insure that the new library will be adequately maintained.

The names of donors of $ 1,000 or more will be listed permanently on a Donor Wall in the new library, in groupings by size of gift. The names of all donors will be included in a final report of the project.

Donor Wall

The Library Trustees are very anxious that all those who wish to participate in this historic project do so. While gifts to the library are always welcome, the Trustees have set a deadline of Sept. 15, for pledges of $1,000 or more to be received in order for the donors' names to be included on the Donor Wall. Pledges may be paid in 2002 and 2003. Gifts or pledges to the Cohasset Library Building Fund, Inc. may be mailed to Sarah R. Pease, Treasurer, 106 South Main St., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Listed below are the names of the donors who have to date pledged $1,000 or more that will comprise the Donor Wall at the new Library.

Dragging their feet to the altar

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Now that the last June bride has dragged her man, kicking and screaming, to the altar, perhaps it's time to examine the institution (if that's the word) of marriage as it is practiced in the year 2002.

Fortunately, we don't have to because the National Marriage Project at Rutgers University has done it for us and has found that men are more reluctant than women to commit "wedded bliss" as it was known in its halcyon days.

The median age for men on their first trip down the aisle is now at an all-time high of 27. Forty years ago, when Hollywood was not permitted to show even a married couple in anything but twin beds, it was 23.

"It's men more often than women who are accused of being 'commitment phobic' and dragging their feet about marriage," says David Popenoe, co-director of the Rutgers project.

The project found the top six reasons why men are reluctant to commit to marriage...

"Our investigation of male attitudes indicates that there is evidence to support this view."

The project found that the top six reasons why men are reluctant to commit marriages are these:

"They can get sex without marriage more easily than in times past."

(He calls her his "significant other." If they marry, she becomes his "ball and chain." And what was that they used to say about buying the cow when the milk is free?)

"They can enjoy the benefits of having a wife by cohabitating rather than marrying."

(It's sort of like having a cleaning woman, a cook, a dishwasher and a mistress all rolled into one. And you can send her out to work if you have to. Can it get any better than that? Where do I sign?)

"They want to avoid divorce and its financial risks."

(Was it the actress Claire Trevor who once said, "What a holler would ensue if people had to pay the minister as much to marry them as they have to pay a lawyer to get them a divorce?" Or a former wife to stay divorced.)

"They want to wait until they are older to have children."

(Ted Williams did at age 50 and look what happened to him. The kid's making him into a Popsicle.)

"They fear that marriage will require too many changes and compromises."

(Like giving up Shannon Tweed and Cinemax after midnight in exchange for the shopping channels and Martha Stewart, if she's successful in staying out of jail.)

"They are waiting for the perfect soulmate and she hasn't appeared."

A man wants a wife, says William Harley Jr., author of the book His Needs, Her Needs, "to look good, provide great sex, join in his recreational activities and tell him he is wonderful.

"Women want affection. They want to feel loved. They want a great conversationalist, a man who is funny, someone who is attractive, a good sexual partner, a man who is ambitious and successful."

Sorry, girls, I'm spoke for.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Palmer campaigns in North Scituate

Nathaniel Palmer, running for State Representative for the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, and North Scituate, spent last week meeting with constituents throughout Precinct 3 of Scituate, the area of town split from the Fourth Plymouth District under the redistricting act of 2001. Presently represented by Frank Hynes, Precinct 3 will join the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull in January 2003 to form the Third Plymouth District. The November 2002 election will determine who represents the new district within the legislature.

"It is always regrettable to see a town split in this way," explains Palmer. "While I cannot reverse the split, I am nonetheless grateful for the chance to work with the residents of North Scituate during the transition process."

The redistricting is the result of state law which mandates that all 160 representative districts have roughly the same average number of constituents. Currently, that average is about 42,000. With the Fourth Plymouth District presently comprised of 42,000 constituents, the lines were redrawn to shift the additional number to the smaller Third Plymouth District.

Republican Nathaniel Palmer, who is running for state representative, chats with gubernatorial candidate Mitt Romney at a fundraiser in Hingham on Monday.

The new district will join towns already bound by many common interests.

"Communities are rarely confined to the arbitrary boundaries of town lines," Palmer says. "North Scituate shares many common goals and concerns with the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull. We all have in common in an interest in strong schools, the preservation of open spaces, and many issues unique to coastal communities, such as the protection of beaches and the need for state assistance maintaining seawalls."

Mark Tobin runs for register of probate

Touting nearly 20 years experience in the state's trial court system, democrat Mark Tobin announces his candidacy for Norfolk Register of Probate.

Speaking before several gatherings, of supporters, Tobin pledged "to make Norfolk Probate and Family court the people's court" and outlined innovate ideas and reforms "to make the court more convenient and accessible to those seeking justice."

Tobin proposed creation of four satellite courts utilizing existing courthouses in Brookline, Quincy, Stoughton and Wrentham - so that county residents would not have to travel up to 40 miles round trip to reach the existing probate court in Dedham.

Mark Tobin

In addition to his years in the juvenile court, Tobin served for 14 years as head administrative assistant to the Norfolk County Register of Probate.

Housing law needs work, group says

The group's first meeting to share ideas and discuss options is planned for 7:30 p.m., Monday, July 22 in the offices of Cohasset Travel in Shaw's Plaza off Route 3A.

The law, sometimes dubbed the "Anti-snob Zoning Act", renders many of the town's zoning regulations inapplicable in exchange for setting aside 20-25 percent units for affordable housing. The statute is applicable only in towns where the affordable housing stock makes up less than 10 percent of a town's entire housing.

Cohasset has about 3 percent or about 76 units of affordable housing.

The statute has many in the Commonwealth concerned about developers skirting local zoning laws.

In Marshfield, selectmen are considering forming a group to explore ways to increase affordable housing stock without going the Chapter 40B route. The board feels a proactive approach in creating affordable housing is preferable to being force-fed plans from developers.

"The whole 40B issue has absolutely nothing to do with affordable housing and everything to do with developers making money by circumventing local zoning," Marshfield Selectman Jim Fitzgerald told the Marshfield Mariner in a recent interview.

Westcott, a vice-president of marketing for an event agency, feels that the law is especially onerous on smaller communities such as Cohasset where Avalon Bay's proposed complex would increase town growth by 10 percent.

"It does not allow communities like Cohasset to control its own future and develop appropriate affordable housing solutions to meet its needs," he said.

AvalonBay plans to build a 254-unit luxury apartment complex at the 62-acre former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor site off Rt. 3A (across from Atlantic Bagel). The size and scope of the project and the fact that it will be built on one of the few remaining tracts of industrially zoned land in town make it controversial.

Its proposal includes building 23, two-to-three story wood-frame buildings with one-, two- and three-bedroom units. The project with heated pool, spa, exercise facility and clubhouse is geared toward "empty-nesters" and young professionals with no kids, although Avalon estimates the project would add an additional 30 kids to the school system.

Town Planner Liz Harrington said 40B certainly has its share of problems. She said the statute has been used as a development ploy with some frequency since its inception. However, she did see some positive aspects to the so-called "Anti-Snob Zoning Act."

"It has stimulated communities to do something about affordable housing," she said. "I think it's positive that Cohasset is in a very serious way looking at how to provide this."

However, Westcott said the town leaders are not doing enough to protect the community from being steam-rolled by the Avalon Bay development. He said the proposal rezones the largest plot of commercially useable land in town and eliminates the potential tax revenue; could threaten the water supply and overextend town resources; and traffic problems. Westcott said it doesn't provides what Cohasset truly needs — affordable and senior housing that is integrated into the community.

"The law needs to be fixed," he said. "It is the developer-driven nature of the law that enables companies like Avalon Bay to exploit these situations."

Westcott said he supports other avenues of trying to establish more affordable housing in Cohasset.

"We support the senior housing committee's work and plan to meet with other senior and affordable housing advocates to look at options," he said.

Senate bill would change Chapter 40B

Senator Robert Hedlund has filed legislation to amend Chapter 40B of the Massachusetts General Laws, also known as the affordable housing statute, to return a degree of local control to cities and towns overwhelmed by the current proliferation of development proposals being filed under this provision.

Hingham currently has three 40B projects under consideration.

The bill, entitled "An Act Relative to Low and Moderate Income Housing," empowers local boards of appeals to review Chapter 40B "comprehensive permit" applications and impose reasonable restrictions and conditions with regard to open space issues, building size, density, setbacks and structure heights. The bill would also allow local boards of appeals to condition and/or deny a comprehensive permit application on land that it deems unsuitable based upon engineering or environmental constraints. The state's Housing Appeals Committee could not overrule a decision by a local board of appeals that relies upon the language of the bill in its determination of suitability.

Rep. Bradley wants Chapter 40B changes

State Representative Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, has co-sponsored An Act Relative to Low and Moderate Housing which would, upon its passage, change the affordable housing laws in the Commonwealth.

This legislation would amend Chapter 40B, the Massachusetts Comprehensive Permit Statute. Currently, the Chapter 40B statute allows affordable housing developers to override local planning and zoning controls, barring communities from imposing reasonable restrictions on such development. This legislation includes revisions to Chapter 40B that would strengthen local autonomy over development that the housing appeals committee could not override. The bill would allow local boards of appeals to impose reasonable restrictions and conditions with regards to size, density, height and open-space issues. It would also allow the local board to condition or deny a comprehensive permit or application on land that it deems unsuitable based on environmental constraints or engineering.

Pratt building bidding reopens

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the sole bid for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has come in lower than expected.

Haddad had put the bid out for $900,000 thinking the town would be able to get that much for the historic building, however, there was only one offer that came in and it was for a little more than $600,000.

"I think if we lower the bid from $900,000 we'll be able to get the money we need," Haddad told selectmen last week.

The selectman reset the bid for $721,000 which includes the incentive of 2.5 percent commission for a broker who brings a buyer to the table.

"This way there will be more incentive to get the word out about the building," Haddad said.

If the building is sold for more money, it will reduce the amount the town needs to borrow for the project. The town will not sell the building for less than $700,000, Haddad said.

Here's how the projected cost of $3.9 million to turn the old Osgood School into a new library is broken down:

- $700,000 from the sale of the old building
- $1.5 million from a state grant
- $1.1 million raised privately from the library trustees
- $600,000 appropriated by Town Meeting

The property's assessed value for fiscal year 2002 is $928,500, that includes the library and little over half of an acre of land. The building is approximately 24,630 square feet and is zoned as residential. The building was able to be constructed as a library because it was built before there were zoning regulations.

Aging is mandatory — growing old is not!

SENIOR SCENE

KATHY BRYANTON

Here at the Cohasset Elder Affairs, we are brainstorming to come up with a list of new programs for the fall that will focus on not only the positive aspects again, but the role a senior center can play in that equation.

Those who work in the aging field predict that the 21st-century will be an area of unprecedented, positive aging. The new positive images of aging depict activity, autonomy, choice and well-being in defiance of traditionally-gloomy stereotypes of decline, decrepitude and dependency. This change is attributed I party to the dynamic shift in images of aging in the media, advertising and public consciousness. As more people live to be 100, we are learning more and more about the ways to embrace healthy aging and encourage the kind of lifestyle choices that lead to it. Increased longevity is a reality and as the quantity of years increase, people in turn, seek ways to make their golden years more fulfilling.

We all know that a basic component of good health in later years is routine health screening and regular visits with you physician. Another prescription for healthy is interaction with other people. Many doctors can prescribe medications that help us live longer but often overlook the day to day lifestyle their patient may be experiencing. That is where organizations, such as Cohasset Elder Affairs, can provide a wonderful complement to successful aging. Just last week, a man came to our new cooking class and was surprised at what he found going on there at the senior center.

So many people have the wrong impression of what a senior center is and they think they'll find people in wheelchairs or the elder population playing Bingo!

So many people have the wrong impression of what a senior center is and they think they'll find people in wheelchairs or the elder population playing Bingo! This is not what the Cohasset Elder Affairs is all about. We promote classes/programs that help seniors feel good about themselves. Elders have a great deal to offer and we encourage their creativity and sharing of knowledge. New and innovative programs are being planned for the fall and we would like your input in this area. Our new center makes it easy for us to arrange any type of class or activity—all we need is an idea.

We plan to organize a planning committee to meet over the summer to come up with some idea for our fall program on successful aging. If you would like to be part of that group, please call us at 781-383-9112. Remember you can be young at 85 and old at any age—it is all in how you perceive yourself. Think young and enjoy the many opportunities the Cohasset Elder Affairs has to offer.

By the way, our program in water aerobics is currently underway at the Cohasset Swim Center on Sohier Street. If you are interested, please drop in at the pool on Mondays, 1:15-2 p.m.; Tuesdays, 12:30-1:15; and Thursdays, 12:30-1:15 p.m. and ask for Darleen; or call 781-383-9463.

Kathy Bryanton is direction of Cohasset Elder Affairs.

Jesse Cole notched a huge win over Morrisette over the weekend to push the Cohasset-Scituate Legion squad past the Quincy team in the race for the fifth and final Zone 6 playoff spot.

Post 118 players celebrate following the final out in Tuesday night's playoff clinching win over Weymouth.

Post 118 completes miraculous stretch run to grab playoff spot

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It was Scott Arnold's mantra since Day One: "I'd put my best nine up against just about anyone else's best nine."

The problem was, up until two weeks ago, the Cohasset Post 118 Legion baseball coach had only had that opportunity once or twice. In fact, most games he was missing three or four of his best nine, and the record reflected it. With eight games to go, the Post 118 team checked in with a 3-8-1 mark, and was looking up in the standings at all but two of the 10 teams in District 6.

It was at about this point that coach Arnold started getting his players back: a handful returning from the Appalachia Service Project, a few more from vacation, and another one or two from injury. And, lo and behold, these young men made their veteran coach look like a genius.

How many people could have possibly guessed this team would even find itself in a do-or-die battle for the fifth and final playoff spot in the last game of the year at 9-9-1? Who would have guessed this team would win a pitcher's duel against Weymouth ace Parker Harrington, who was five days removed from a no-no against Quincy? Obviously, we're precluding coach Arnold and most of the Cohasset and Scituate players from the polling.

"We knew we had the talent to do it," said Tom Fitzgerald, who won the pitcher's duel with Harrington, 2-0, on Tuesday night to put Post 118 back in the playoffs after a one year absence. "It wasn't a lot of fun coming to the ballpark in the middle part of the season, but we hung in there. It's a lot of fun now.

Major League Tragedy

DAVID INGBER

The Major League Baseball All-Star game is supposed to be the perfect night for players and fans. But imperfect does not even begin to do the night justice.

The utter disappointment began at 8:00 p.m., when the American and National League rosters were declared. Although this may have been the fault of the network, the announcer mixed up the names of Oakland All-Stars Miguel Tejada and Barry Zito, spoiling the ovation that the young shortstop should have received.

Not so bad, right?

The pre-game festivities continued to upset Boston fans everywhere when the list of Major League Baseball's Most Memorable Moments included Bill Buckner's 1986 miscue amongst such glorious Yankees tributes as Don Larsen's World Series Perfect Game and Joe DiMaggio's 56 game hitting streak.

Getting bad, but still not tragic, right?

Even worse was the selection of Chicago area recording artist Anastacia to sing our national anthem. Now there have been some awful renditions of F. Scott Key's masterpiece, but Anastacia's version sunk the composition to a new

Cohasset's Ingber named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed here as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

After consulting with area coaches, however, we feel secure that we chose the top nine singles players and top four doubles teams in Marinerland for this honor.

Singles

David Ingber — Junior
First Singles – Cohasset

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic selection…made our squad as half of a doubles team (with 2001 grad Jeff Scribner) last year, but made the transformation to singles play this season to emerge as the top player and leader of this young Skippers team that shocked many by finishing in second place in the South Shore League and qualifying for the state tourney…finished with a 7-5 record, but three of those losses came to top 10 New England ranked players, Norwell's Sam Bitetti (twice) and Hingham's Brian Marsden…played Bitetti (who has-

Cohasset's Kristin Sheerin will be taking her considerable gymnastics talent to SUNY-Brockport this fall.

Sheerin takes flight

After top showing at National championships, former CHS gymnast looks ahead to college

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

There is probably no athlete on the South Shore who meant more to their team than Kristin Sheerin did to the Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics squad. Combining her gymnastics skills with her ability to lead, Sheerin was able to have her most exciting high school hurrah before heading off to begin her college career as a gymnast.

Sheerin was one of only 10 female gymnasts in all of Massachusetts selected to go to the Nationals Competition, the highest level a high school athlete can achieve. Held in Las Vegas, the competition showcased the top gymnasts from 15 states.

"It was quite an experience," said Kristin's mother, Trish, who coached gymnastics at Scituate and Rockland High. "The level of competition looked collegiate. It was all

With an unblemished record, the South boys' lacrosse team once again successfully argued the case that the best high school lacrosse in Massachusetts is played on the South Shore.

With 22 of 24 squad members coming from Milton, Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, Scituate and Marshfield, the Southeast squad cruised through a five-team draw that included All-Americans and all-Scholastics from western and northern Massachusetts, from Greater Boston, and from the Cape, the Islands and even top-ranked Duxbury (separated from the rest of the South Shore, and placed in the Coastal region).

Outscoring the opposition 73-37, the South knocked off the North – featuring players from EMass D1 finalist Beverly, 2001 state champ spot…Overall, McDonald finished with a 17-2 record…McDonald plans to attend Drew in New Jersey where he will continue his tennis career. Marshfield coach Glenn Ward: "Ryan is a very aggressive player who has improved tremendously since his sophomore season. He plays with a lot of emotion and works exceptionally hard, sometimes too hard."

Eric Goldman - Junior (Capt.)
First singles - Abington

One of the top singles players in the competitive South Shore League, Goldman received All-star recognition for the second-straight year…Went 13-5 from the No. 1 spot this season and his consistent performance helped lead the Green Wave's impressive turnaround…Abington finished fourth in the SSL at 6-6 after going winless in the league last year…Goldman was also instrumental in the team's improvements against non-league competitors finishing 8-10 overall, just missing a post-season berth, after going 1-15 last year…Strength and smarts are among Goldman's best qualities on the court…Still a junior, Goldman will return to the No. 1 spot for a third-straight season and will captain the team. Goldman is making his first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team, having received an Honorable Mention last season. Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "Eric is a good, solid, aggressive player. He's improved tremendously over the last year because he is willing to do the work in the off-season. We're real glad to have him back next year."

Brian Marsden - Junior
First singles - Hingham

Brian Marsden

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Marsden was well on his way to yet another banner year until an injury caused him to miss the latter half of the season… The junior was a perfect 7-0 in the seven matches he played for Hingham this season and the team was 6-1 while he was on the court…The team finished at 8-2 in the Patriot League, good for second place behind Duxbury…The Harbormen were 12-5 overall and reached the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney…During Marsden's seven matches, he defeated both Duxbury's No. 1 player and Norwell's Sam Bitetti, avenging last season's loss…Marsden has been the Harbormen's No. 1 player for the last three seasons and was instrumental to the team winning consecutive PL titles and appearances in two-straight South finals…Over his first two seasons, Marsden reached both the finals and semifinals in the South Individual tourney, but was unable to compete this year…A three-year PL All-star, Marsden will return to the top singles spot next season. Hingham coach Ron Bartles: "He's a great player. He's consistent and is mentally tough. He has a great serve and volley and plays a very strong net game. He's a solid, all-around, complete player."

Brian Holmquest - Sophomore
Second singles - Marshfield

Brian Holmquest

A two-year starter at the No. 2 singles spot, Holmquest had another solid season for the Old Colony League champion Rams going 19-2 in 13 matches at No. 1 singles, and eight matches at No.2 singles…Holmquest went this season for Marshfield, who went unbeaten in the OCL at 14-0 and finished an overall 19-2…A two-time league All-star (Atlantic Coast League and OCL) and two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in tennis, Holmquest helped lead Marshfield to the semifinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional for the second-straight year…Also a talented distance runner, Holmquest was named to Mariner AS cross country squad last fall…Holmquest will own the top singles spot for Marshfield next season. Marshfield coach Glenn Ward: "Brian is extremely patient. He's usually the last person off the court even in a two-set match because his points take a long time to finish. He knows how to work the ball to his opponent's disposition and is extremely accurate."

Rob Becker - Senior (Capt.)
Second singles - Hingham

Rob Becker

Started the season in the No. 2 singles spot for the Harbormen, but was called up to the top spot when fellow All-Scholastic Brian Marsden was ousted due to injury… Went 6-1 in his seven matches at the No. 2 spot and followed that up with a 2-1 stint at first singles to go 8-2 overall…Becker's performance was essential to keeping Hingham afloat and helped lead the Harbormen to a second-place finish in the Patriot League and to the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney…In the post-season, Becker went 1-1, defeating his Bridgewater-Raynham opponent before dropping a tight match to Marshfield's Ryan McDonald…A two-time PL All-star, Becker plans to Colgate, where he is considering continuing his tennis career. Hingham coach Ron Bartles: "Rob had a tough task jumping into the No. 1 spot, but he did very well for us. He was a solid performer at both positions."

Sam Bitetti – Junior
First Singles – Norwell

Sam Bitetti

Has helped extend the Clippers unbeaten streak in South Shore League play to eight consecutive seasons with his sensational play at number one singles over the last three years… finished 16-1 this season after going unbeaten last year, his only loss coming to Hingham superstar Brian Marsden in non-league play…has lost only one league match during his three year career, that coming as a freshman…has not lost a single set in league play the last two years…has reached the semifinals in the state individual tourney each of the past two years, falling to Newton's Luke Tedaldi each time…two-time Boston Globe and Mariner All-Scholastic ('01, '02)…named a Boston Herald All-Scholastic this year…three time South Shore League all-star…currently ranked eighth in New England by the USTA in the under-16 division…is half of the number one ranked doubles pair in New England right now with Michael Gallagher from Darian, Conn…this pair won the USTA sectionals at Yale last month…likes science and math, and figures to pursue that affinity further in college…a high honor roll student…carries a 3.85 GPA and takes several AP courses…won the Dartmouth Book Award and a silver medal in the Latin Exam this year…would like to play tennis in college…also a South Shore League all-star in cross country his freshman and sophomore years, but did not run track this fall in order to concentrate more fully on tennis…Norwell coach Jay Swartz: "What more can I say about Sam? He's just an incredibly talented, mature and competitive tennis player."

Mike Wiltshire – Senior
Second Singles – Norwell

Mike Wiltshire

Norwell's 18th year head coach called Wiltshire "the most improved high school tennis player over four years" he's ever seen… after not playing at all as a freshman, and then just sparingly as a doubles player the following year, Wiltshire emerged to go 30-2 (21-1 in SSL play) over the last two years playing second singles, including a perfect 17-0 this season, playing a huge rule in extending the Clippers unbeaten streak in South Shore League play to eight consecutive seasons…two time South Shore League all-star and Mariner All-Scholastic selection… plays tennis year round as a member of the Weymouth Tennis Club…has played in several USTA tourneys…will play in the Todd Morsilli Clay Court Tournament in Rhode Island this week, one of the biggest annual events on the New England amateurs circuit…played basketball and soccer his freshman year…plays the guitar…older brother, Jonathan (class of 2000), also played tennis at Norwell High…will attend St. Lawrence University in upstate New York, and is leaning toward a Liberal Arts major…has already spoken to this school's tennis coach and intends to play for the Div. 3 program next spring…Norwell coach Jay Swartz: "In all my years of coaching, I've never a player improve over four years Mike has. He was kind of a rolly polly kid as a freshman who, honestly, barely made the team. Now, he's one of the best players in the area. The transformation was just incredible. This year, he really wasn't all that far behind (teammate and star) Sam (Bitetti). The gave each other some real good battles in practice, and it made them both better players."

Ryan Cahill – Junior
First Singles – Scituate

Ryan Cahill

An exceptional athlete who emerged in his "third favorite sport" to give the Sailors respectable play at the all-important first singles spot…a tall, rangy player who covers the court exceptionally well…record of 5-5 was far from reflective of his talent, as all five of those losses came to top ranked USTA New England players Brian Marsden (Hingham), Sam Bitetti (Norwell) and Matt Bryson (Duxbury)…also played some doubles this year…Patriot League All-Star…Patriot Ledger All-scholastic Honorable Mention…a sensational soccer player who was a no-brainer for our Mariner All-Scholastic Soccer team this past fall…has already been named a captain for the 2002 team soccer and basketball…a member of the Scituate High basketball team that made it to the Div. 3 South Sectional finals this winter…looking at both colleges and prep schools after graduation from Scituate High…Scituate coach Rob Leary: "Ryan's a great kid who's really improved as a tennis player. Athleticism alone makes up for some of his shortcomings, but he's really improved in his technique too. He works at it."

Doubles

Bill Burke/Jason Despier
First Doubles - Marshfield

This talented duo was a catalyst in Marshfield's 14-0 unbeaten Old Colony League title season… Burke, a senior and two-year veteran at first doubles, and junior Despier went unbeaten themselves this season with a 18-0 record for the Rams… Their fierce play on the doubles front helped lead Marshfield (19-2) to the Div. 1 South Sectional semifinals for the second-straight season…Burke is a two-time league All-star (OCL and Atlantic Coast League) and received an Honorable Mention to last year's Mariner All-Scholastic team along with then partner Sebastian Giese, while Despier — formerly a third singles and second doubles player — is receiving the honor for the first time…Burke plans to attend Stonehill, where he will tryout for the tennis team, while Despier is off to UMass Dartmouth where he plans to major in international business. Marshfield coach Glenn Ward: "These two were very much alike and learned that you don't win matches by hitting hard, rather by hitting the ball where your opponents aren't. Jason is great at lobbing, while Bill is solid at returning a serve. They both know how to get to the net and stay there. The compliment each other very well and were an excellent doubles team."

Bill Burke

Jason Despier

Nat Kingdon/Phil Studley
First Doubles - Hingham

Playing for the first time together this season, this talented duo an undeniable force on the doubles court for Patriot League runners up (8-2)…Both seniors, Kingdon, a two-year first doubles veteran, and Studley combined for a 9-1 record in the Patriot League this season, splitting matches with PL champions Duxbury…The pair was 12-3 overall, dropping two heart-breaking matches to Wellesley in the final match of the regular season and Marshfield in the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney…Kingdon is a two-time Patriot League All-star at doubles and made our All-Scholastic team last year with partner Seth Purcell, while Studley is receiving the honor for the first time this season…Both 2002 grads, Kingdon and Studley will be off to college in the fall and may continue their tennis careers. Hingham coach Ron Bartles: "They are probably the strongest doubles team I've ever had here. They're both extremely reliable and showed great sportsmanship. They showed up at every practice and every game, which is a rarity for seniors. Nat is one of the best doubles players I've ever seen."

Jeremy Shepard/Josh DeSieno -
First Doubles - Abington

Josh DeSieno

A talented duo, Shepard, a senior, and DeSieno, a junior, were among the top three doubles teams in the highly-competitive South Shore League…The pair's performance on the court this season led to one of the most impressive turnarounds in South Shore boys tennis, shifting from last year's 1-15 Green Wave record, to this season's 8-10 finish…The Abington team also finished fourth in the SSL at 6-6, after not winning a single league match last season…Shepard and DeSieno earned them first-ever recognition from SSL coaches beating every league duo but heavyweights from Norwell and Mashpee…Clutch performances by the pair also led to the Green Wave's four-game win streak, which closed out their season…Shepard plans to attend college next year, while DeSieno will return to the AHS team as a senior. Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "I was very happy that the league recognized Jeremy and Josh this year. They did a great job together this year and were very deserving of the recognition."

Kyle Swartz /Mike Allen -
First doubles - Norwell

Kyle Swartz

After putting together a very solid season as second doubles partners as freshmen, these sophomores two really found their stride this season with the promotion to number one doubles, going unbeaten in South Shore League play and finishing up 13-1 overall, helping extend the Clippers unbeaten streak in South Shore League play to eight consecutive seasons… named South Shore League all-stars this spring…compliment each other well, Kyle (the son of coach Jay Swartz) being the more technically sound player and Mike an extremely aggressive player by nature…Kyle also possesses a powerful forehand…knocked off the SSL favored Mashpee doubles team early in the season, 6-2, 6-3, giving coach Swartz the first indication of what a special season this might be for his top team…also beat Scituate's top doubles team of Conrad Williams and Jamie Anderson (Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mentions) in a pair of three set thrillers this season…Kyle also plays soccer at Norwell High and Mike runs cross country. . . Norwell coach Jay Swartz: "Mike and Kyle took their lumps a little bit as freshman last year, which wasn't all that surprising. They weren't as good at controlling the play as a lot off the veteran teams they played, but this year they really learned to serve and volley and when to charge the net."

Major League Tragedy

low. On top of her annoyingly nasal voice, she twice insulted this great nation by botching the lyrics. (I believe the song goes "and the rockets' red glare" not "as the rockets gave air." Get it right, or get some cue cards, Annie.)

Then, the geniuses who chose the man to throw out the ceremonial first pitch made an even bigger booboo. They selected Hall of Fame pitcher Warren Spahn for the honor, apparently not realizing that the arthritic old gentleman could not throw the ball much further than his own feet. This move not only embarrassed the legendary hurler, but it made at least one baseball fan quite livid.

After 52 long minutes of pre-game, the Classic was finally ready to commence, and all my anger melted away. It was time to watch the purest game of baseball known to man, where for one night, there are no talks of trade rumors, salary inflation, free agency, and contract extensions.

Oh wait, that only lasted about two innings until a sideline reporter managed a dugout interview with Yankees first baseman Jason Giambi. His questions did not center around the success of his team or the performance he made the night before in winning the 2002 Home Run Derby. Instead, the interview focused exclusively on Giambi's dopey opinion of the potential player strike in August and the absurd revenue the Yankees have used to land high profile free agents Jeff Weaver and Raul Mondesi in recent weeks.

But at least once the game started, we got to see the best players in the world. . . right? Well, sort of. Two of the best pitchers in the game, Tom Glavine and Pedro Martinez, both possible candidates to start the All-Star game for their respective leagues, pulled out of the contest days before because of a Michael Johnson-type fear of injuring themselves.

As the game wore on, I rediscovered why the All-Star Game is the greatest athletic event of the summer. Arizona phenom Curt Schilling started the game brilliantly for the National League, cruising through two innings with 97 mile per hour cut fastballs that made the AL's best hitters look like overmatched Little Leaguers facing Danny Almonte. Minnesota's Torii Hunter made an incredible catch in the first inning, leaping three feet above the centerfield wall to rob Barry Bonds of a home run. On my personal favorite play, Red Sox pitcher Derek Lowe served up a fastball that was struck to Red Sox outfielder Manny Ramirez who made a perfect throw to Red Sox third basemen Shea Hillenbrand to nab a hustling Chicago Cub.

The game progressed in entertaining fashion, with outstanding examples of pitching, defense, hitting and speed. When the game made it to the ninth inning with a tied score, I was pleased to find out my enjoyable night was to be extended. But during the bottom of the 11th inning, there occurred the biggest travesty of the night.

The already unpopular Major League Baseball commissioner Bud Selig, former (wink wink) owner of the Milwaukee Brewers and engineer of this year's All-Star Shame, approached the microphone with his smug trademark grin and told the enthusiastic Wisconsin fans: "The game will end in a tie if a run is not scored this inning."

All at once, those cheerful cheeseheads became hostile. A tie? Did he just say a tie? Is he serious? What is this, soccer? Hockey? Olympic pairs ice dancing? As Tom Hanks should have put it, "There's no tying in baseball!"

Selig later rationalized his decision by noting there were not enough pitchers left to continue a longer game. Regardless, ending the Midsummer Classic in a 7-7 tie satisfied no one and enraged everyone.

Something could have been done to put an actual baseball ending to this game. Managers could have delighted the fans and put utility fielders on the mound. Selig could have announced a rule that allowed teams to recycle pitchers who had already been used. (Zito, whose All-Star outing lasted just three pitches, was one of nine pitchers who made fewer than 15 throws.) Better yet, both teams could have agreed to put Bud Selig himself on the mound so the likes of Sammy Sosa and Paul Konerko could blast some well placed line drives into the shins of their maligned commissioner. It did not matter, but a tie? Please.

Prior to this one, 10 All-Star games went into extra frames, and all were completed. Why was this one any different? Probably because both dugouts were infested with overpaid crybabies who care more about themselves than they do about their fans.

Furthermore, despite all his famous doublespeak, Selig will not be able to come up with anything resembling a reasonable explanation as to why a Most Valuable Player was not named at the close of the game. The MVP of this year's contest was supposed to be named in a tribute to the Splendid Splinter, Ted Williams, a Boston hero who died several weeks ago. Selig's failure to even name one was a slap in the face to Williams' memory, his family and his fans.

I woke up the morning after the All-Star game so angered that I found myself thinking something that I never thought I would. I found myself actually wishing for a full player strike. This is not because I have lost faith in the game, but because I think it will drive ol' Bud to an early retirement.

"We're back in the playoffs now, and this is where it gets really fun," added Fitzgerald, who was with that playoff team in 2000 as a high school sophomore. The lefty from Scituate went the route Tuesday, surrendering just two hits and two walks, while striking out seven.

Post 118 will open the post-season on Friday night on the road, likely in Norwood, the team that looked to have first place wrapped up in Zone 6-West, beginning a best of three series.

As for Tuesday night's win, Weymouth entered the game still fighting for the third place playoff seeding, and was thus hardly ready to concede the game, as witnessed by the player they trotted out to the mound: Harrington, a hard throwing lefty. Arnold countered with his own lefty ace, B.C. High product Fitzgerald.

For three innings, the game sailed along pretty much as most would have predicted. Both starters allowed two runners to reach, but the game remained scoreless. Mike Gulinello and Ted Straughn singled for Post 118 in the second and third, respectively, but Gulinello was doubled up and Straughn was picked off first on a nice move by Weymouth's lanky lefty. Fitzgerald matched that, though, the only hit off him to this point a bloop opposite field double down the left field line by number three hitter Chris McDonough.

Cohasset finally broke the ice in the top of the fourth. Connelly did a nice job of taking a fastball on the outside part of the plate the opposite way, lining it just over the head of Weymouth third baseman Brian Tangui. He then stole second and went to third when Jesse Cole reached on an infield error. Harrington bared down to get a big strikeout on dangerous cleanup hitter Tim Straughn for the second out, but Gulinello (2-for-3) came up with a huge single to deep short to plate Connelly.

In the fifth, it was Greg Levin's turn to come up with a clutch two out hit, his double to left center plating Ted Straughn (3-for-3) to make it a 2-0 game.

Weymouth was far from done, however. Fitzgerald's streak of eight straight retired should by all rights have been broken to open the sixth when Weymouth's Jonathan Paul ripped a liner into the hole between first and second. Scituate's Alex Knight came up with the defensive highlight of the game, however, diving to his left and somehow cleanly fielding the high quick hop, and then scrambling to his feet to nip the runner at first.

This play proved mammoth, as Fitzgerald proceeded to walk the next two Weymouth hitters and then run the count to 3-and-1 on heavy hitting third hitter Chris McDonough. The sweet swinging lefty sat on the next offering and hit a screaming liner to left center that had the Post 118 faithful covering their eyes. The worry was for naught, however, as speedy centerfielder Levin, off on the crack of the bat, got there in time to snare the missile. Fitzgerald, who admitted he was tiring at this point, came back to get cleanup hitter James LeFleur swinging, getting the last two strikes with an off speed curve that proved his bread and butter all night.

"My arm was starting to drag a little, but I got a burst of adrenaline," said Fitzgerald, who will pitch for Babson College next spring. "My teammates picked me up a few times in the game, and that catch by Greg really got me fired up."

Fitzgerald, a "junkballer", effectively mixed in a straight change and a "sneaky" fastball all night, consistently picking up strikes with all three.

"Fitzy just pitched his heart out tonight," gushed coach Arnold. "When we needed him most, he was there."

Alex Knight has been a gold glove caliber second baseman all season for Post 118, but the play he made in the seventh inning of Tuesday's playoff clinching win over Weymouth left even the team's closest followers shaking their heads in disbelief.

There was another scare in the seventh when Mark Caden slapped a one out single back up the middle and pinch hitter Eric Fardig followed with another screamer toward no man's land. However, Levin got on his horse again, this tiem ranging far in to right center to make the grab. Fitzgerald then closed the game out in style, settign up another pinch hitter with a couple of fastballs and changeups before finally punching him out with the curve.

"We got a couple of clutch hits from veteran players, which is just what you look to them for," raved Arnold after the game. "It was a total team effort. We got great pitching tonight, great defense, and some timely hitting against a very good pitcher.

"We're obviously getting hot at the right time. We're much better than a 10-9-1 team. Our record over the last eight games shows that. It's like I've said all year: when we've got our best nine, we're as good as anyone."

There aren't many left questioning that now.

Post 118 Notes

Playing its final eight games in 13 days, the Post 118ers, made up of Cohasset and Scituate ballplayers, ripped off seven wins, the only loss coming to unbeaten Braintree last Wednesday. After that, the Coh-Scit team pulled out four wins in four days over Morrisette, Milton, Morrisette again and Stoughton. The first three wins were huge. Milton (11-8) is the third place team in Zone 6, while Morrisette was the team Post 118 was trying to surpass for fifth place.

The 8-4 win over last place Stoughton on Sunday, with number five starter Tim Straughn going five plus strong innings and Jason Connelly mopping up in a closer's role, put the Post 118ers in a position few would have thought possible just a few days earlier: in control of their own destiny.

"We needed great pitching from our top pitchers, and we got it," said Arnold of the rotation of Jesse Cole, Jason Connelly, Tom Fitzgerald and Chris Carr. "And then we needed Timmy to come up big on Sunday even though he hadn't pitched much this year, and that's exactly what he did."

Straughn, who's fastball is reportedly clocked at over 90 miles per hour, was mowing down Stoughton hitters through the early innings, but finally began to tire in the sixth. At this point, Connelly, coming off a huge complete game effort against Milton just three days earlier, came in to get the last five outs.

Thus, with the win over fourth place Weymouth in Tuesday's regular season finale, Post 118 locked up fifth place with a 10-9-1 record, one point better than Morrisette (9-10) could finish even if it beat Weymouth in last night's scheduled showdown.

Cohasset swimmers stay perfect

Plymouth Eel River team downed 335-261

The Cohasset Swim Team improved to 3-0 on Friday with a successful outing in Plymouth at the Eel River team's beautiful Beach Club venue.

It was a small scale meet, with only half the usual squad but with warm-ups over, and the visitors acclimatized to the wonderful, but chilly, salt-water pool, Cohasset got off to a fine start, moving into the lead from the first event and staying ahead throughout the morning. The meet ended with Cohasset scoring 335 points to Eel River's 261.

The eight and under boys and girls started strong and led the way to five out of six wins in the 100 yard medley relays (boys: 1st: Salerno; Adkins; MacCormack; Kissick; 3rd: Kennedy; McCarthy; McCarthy, R.; Fontaine; girls: 1st: Farren, A.; Berube; Kissick; McCunney; 3rd: Farren, N.; Bodner; Gibbons; Farren, V.). Their ten and under team mates took first and third in the boys race (1st: Ofsthun; Kissick; Shipp; Durkin, J.; 3rd: Plante; MacCormack; Kahy; Whitney) and first, third and fourth in the girls' event (1st: McBride; Kelly, M.; Murphy; Dickinson; 3rd: Jennings; Sullivan; Axelson; Libby; 4th: Adkins; Fortin; Kelly, K. Fontaine). The twelve and under boys won their race and the girls finished in second, fifth and sixth places (boys: 1st: McCarthy; DeGiacomo; Shipp; Daley; girls: 2nd: Ryan; Fortin; McCarthy; McCarthy, C.; 5th: Coggins; Asnault; Meikleham; Salerno; 6th: Costa; Hurd; Baumgarten; McElhinny).

The seventeen and unders rounded off the medley relays, with wins in both the girls and boys 200 yard events (boys: 1st: McCarthy; Dickinson; Blackburn; Roach; girls: 1st: Jerome; Swain; O'Brien; Ogrodnik; 3rd: Plante; Harrington; Harrington, B.; Previte). Cohasset was now ahead by 28 points.

The ten and under 50 yard free relays occupy the next slot in the program, and the Cohasset swimmers put in excellent performances to take first place in each of their races (boys: 1st; Ofsthun; 3rd: Durkin, J.; 4th: Shipp, M.; girls: 1st: Libby, S.; 3rd: Sullivan, O.; 5th: Murphy, O.).

The individual medleys were next up and once again, Cohasset started well with a win for the twelve and under boys (1st, Shipp, A.; 3rd: Yeager, A.). The girls had a less productive race finishing third, fourth and sixth (3rd: Fortin, S.; 4th: Ryan, K.; 6th: Baumgarten, E.) and the pattern was repeated again at the fourteen and under level. The boys took the win and the girls finished third, fourth and sixth (boys: 1st: Dickinson, R.; 2nd: Daly, B.; girls: 3rd: Harrington, K.; 4th: Daly, S.; 6th: Guinee, A.). The event ended with a win for the seventeen and under girls and a second place for the boys (girls: 1st: O'Brien, K.; 4th: Ogrodnik, M.; boys: 2nd: Blackburn, C.). With the freestyle event coming up, Cohasset was now 30 points ahead of Eel River.

The 25 yard freestyle began with the usual strong show from the eight and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Salerno, J.; 3rd: Kissick, C.; 4th: Berube, G.; girls: 1st: Kissick, H.; 3rd: Farren, N.; 4th: Bodner, K.). The ten and under boys didn't quite make the win, but took second, fourth and sixth places (2nd: Durkin, J.; 4th: Whitney, A.; 6th: Plante, J.). The girls came back with a win and a fourth and fifth place finish, nudging Cohasset's lead ahead to 34 points (1st: Jennings, M; 4th: Dickinson, R.; 5th: Kelly, K.).

In the fifty yard freestyle events Cohasset struggled a little against strong Eel River performances. The twelve and under boys finished in second, third and sixth places and the girls finished second, fourth and fifth (boys: 2nd: Shipp, A.; 3rd: DeGiacomo, S.; 6th: Yeager, A.; girls: 2nd: McCarthy, M.; 4th: McCarthy, C.; 5th: Hurd, A.). At the fourteen and under level, again the boys were held to second, third and fourth place finishes, but the girls pulled back with a win (boys: 2nd: Roach, K.; 3rd: Daly, B.; 4th: Masotta, B.; girls: 1st: Previte, M.; 4th: James, K.; 5th: Plante, V.). The seventeen and unders finished the event with a win for the boys and a second and third place finish for the girls (boys: 1st: Blackburn, C.; girls: Ogrodnik, M.; 3rd: Harrington, B.).

The butterfly has to be one of the most challenging strokes but the Cohasset swimmers were right on form and claimed a win the first three twenty five yard races (boys, eight and under: 1st: MacCormack, P.; 3rd: Fontaine, A.; 5th: Adkins, J.; girls, eight and under: 1st: Kissick, H.; 2nd: Berube, M.; 3rd: Farren, A.; boys, ten and under: 1st: Kissick, J.; 2nd: Shipp, M.; 4th: MacCormack, J.). The ten and under girls had more of a struggle and finished third, fourth and fifth (3rd: Murphy, O.; 4th: Dickinson, R.; 6th: Axelson, O.), and the twelve and under boys and girls continued in the same vein with a fourth and fifth place for the boys and a fourth, fifth and sixth place for the girls (boys: 4th: McCarthy, E.; 5th: Yeager, A.; girls: Dunn, B.; 5th: Durkin, K.; 6th: Masotta, A.).

In the fifty yard event, Cohasset, again, were denied the win, but had a second place in the boys, fourteen and under race and a second, third and fourth in the girls race (boys: 2nd: Dickinson, R.; girls: 2nd: Previte, M.; 3rd: Swain, K.; 4th: Guinee, A.). The butterflies finished with a second place for both the seventeen and under boys and girls (boys: 2nd: McCarthy, D.; girls: 2nd: Jerome, E.). It was a tough event and it showed on the score card. Cohasset was still ahead, but now with a reduced margin (Cohasset: 179; Eel River: 157).

There was, however, plenty of time for redemption, and in the next event, the breaststroke, Cohasset were back on form, with a win in all four, twenty five yard, races (boys, eight and under: 1st: McCarthy, M.; 4th: Berube, G.; 5th: McCarthy, R.; girls: 1st: Berube, M.; 3rd: Farren, N.; 6th: Farren, V.; boys, ten and under: 1st: Kissick, J.; 2nd: Leahy, S.; 5th: Plante, J.; girls, ten and under: 1st: Kelly, M; 3rd: Sullivan, O.; 6th: Fortin, S.). In the fifty yard event, the twelve and under boys again pulled off a win, while the girls just missed the win, but finished second, third and fourth (boys: 1st: Kelly, T.; 2nd: DeGiacomo, S.; 5th: McCarthy, E.; girls: 2nd: Meikleham, A.; 3rd: Fortin, S.; 4th: Coggins, S.).

At the fourteen and under level the Cohasset swimmers pulled ahead again, with wins for both the boys and the girls (boys: 1st: Roach, K.; 2nd: Daly, B.; 4th: Masotta, B.; girls: 1st: Swain, K.; 4th: Daly, S.; 5th: Richardson, L.). The event finished with a second place finish for the seventeen and under boys and a third, fourth and sixth place for the girls (boys: 2nd: McCarthy, D.; girls: 3rd: Ogrodnik, M; 4th: Harrington, B.; 6th: Guinee, A.). Cohasset had pushed ahead again to secure a 41 point lead.

In the backstroke, the eight and under boys and girls again took off at an impressive pace with a win in both races (boys: 1st: Salerno, J.; 4th: Kennedy, V.; 5th: Fontaine, A.; girls: 1st: Farren, A.; 4th: Gibbons, E.; 5th: Axelson, M.). The ten and under boys fell behind to finish in third, fourth and fifth places, while the girls pushed ahead again to finish first, third and fifth (boys: 3rd: Ofsthun, C.; 4th: Whitney, A.; 5th: MacCormack, T.; girls: 1st: Fontaine, E.; 3rd: Jennings, M.; 5th: Adkins, O.).

In the fifty yard backstroke, the twelve and unders kept the pace with wins in both their races (boys: 1st: Connors, R.; 2nd: Daly, R.; 3rd: Kelly, T.; girls: 1st: Ryan, K.; 4th: Costa, A.; 6th: Baumgarten, E.). The fourteen and under boys also won their race and the girls took fourth and fifth places (boys: 1st: Dickinson, R.; 2nd: Masotta, B.; girls: 4th: Plante, V.; 5th: James, K.). The event finished with another win for the seventeen and under boys and a second, third and fourth place for the girls (2nd: Jerome, E.; 3rd: Harrington, B.; 4th: Harrington, K.).

With one more event to go, Cohasset continued to preserve their lead and ended the meet with a series of powerful relay performances. The eight and under boys and girls took the first wins (boys: 1st: Kissick, McCarthy, M.; Adkins, Salerno; girls: MacCormack, P.; McCarthy, R.; Berube, Kennedy; girls: 1st: Farren, A.; Farren, N.; Berube, M.; Kissick; 2nd: Gibbons, E.; McCunney, Axelson, Bodner), followed closely by their ten and under team mates (boys: 1st: Kissick; Ofsthun; Durkin; Shipp; 2nd: Whitney; Plante; MacCormack; Leahy; girls: 1st: Libby; McBride; Murphy; Sullivan; 2nd: Kelly, K.; Jennings, M.; Fontaine; Dickinson).

The twelve and under boys also took a win, and the girls finished in second, fourth and fifth places (boys: 1st: Shipp, Yeager; DeGiacomo; Connors; girls: 2nd: McCarthy, C.; Ryan; Hurd; Fortin; 4th: McCarthy, M.; Durkin; Costa; Coggins; 5th: Salerno; McElhinny; Masotta; Dunn). The event finished with a win for the seventeen and under boys (1st: Masotta; Blackburn; Roach; Daly) and a second and fourth place finish for the girls (2nd: Jerome, E.; Richardson; Previte; Daly, S.; 4th: Swain; James; Harrington, K.; Guinee). Cohasset had now accumulated a final score of 335, to Eel River's 261.

It was a pleasant and successful meet in a beautiful setting. Compared to the oppressive heat of the week before, everyone welcomed the ocean breeze and the opportunity for a stroll on the beach. And, in some ways, the smaller squad made for a less pressured pace. Perhaps more to the point, Cohasset brought home another win, and remain undefeated this season. They now prepare to face the highly competitive Mask squad in this Friday's meet. We wish them all the best and look forward to what should be one of the most challenging competitions of the season.

very impressive."

Given that the competitors were all seniors who had already decided on colleges, there were few recruiters at the competition. However, the large crowds, the cameramen who filmed right in the faces of the athletes during warm-ups, and the other athletes provided enough pressure. On top of that, the Massachusetts athletes had the added load of being the defending Nationals Champions on their shoulders.

"We had a lot of pressure on us," noted Sheerin, who is one of only three of the Massachusetts athletes who will continue her gymnastics career in college next year, "but we weren't as serious as some of the teams in the past. We were just hoping to make the top five."

The Bay Staters did just that, taking fifth place behind Washington, New York, Texas and Wisconsin. According to Sheerin, the level of competion was "overwhelming" at times, but having a good time became more important as the weekend wore on.

In the competition, each state entered five athletes in each event: beam, floor, vault and uneven bars. Then the top three scores were counted and tallied, and the highest average score for the four events placed for the team.

Sheerin competed in her best two events, floor and beam. Sheerin was her normal self on the floor routine, flipping her way to an impressive 9.25 score, which was the top score on the Massachusetts team.

On beam, Sheerin had a solid routine going, opting for a safe high score rather than a risky terrific score at the coach's advice. However, when Sheerin fell off the beam, something she had not done in competition all year, the time to be safe ended. She decided to write in a more impressive dismount, a cartwheel double full, which is a cartwheel followed by a backflip dismount with two twists in the air.

Although the Lady Skipper had never attempted this move in competition before, she landed it perfectly to bump her faltering score up to a top three finish of 8.95.

"I can do [the dismount] consistently now. It will start to be a part of my routines," said Sheerin. "I was just glad I finished in the top three in both of my events. I felt like I contributed."

Kristen Sheerin

In a couple of months, Sheerin will head to SUNY-Brockport, a Division III school that seems very excited to have Kristin joining the gymnastics team. When Sheerin visited the school, she said she had a great time working out with the team that "really took me under their wing."

In addition, Sheerin has had regular contact with the coach, John Feeney, a man who has on several occasions driven six hours to watch his newest recruit compete.

Sheerin certainly has the talent to go to a Division II or even Division I college, however she decided on SUNY-Brockport pretty early on. Going to a Division III school means Sheerin will most likely be able to compete at the varsity level in her first year on the team, whereas at most upper level schools, it is only juniors and seniors who compete. Also, the practice schedule is not nearly as time consuming, allowing Sheerin to enjoy a more complete college experience.

"The practices for a D-1 school would take the fun out of it," observed Sheerin, a six-time league All-Star in high school and no stranger to hard work. "It is still going to be really tough, but I would rather have fun than end up hating it."

Hopefully, in a couple of years, word will come back that Sheerin means as much to her college team as she did to the Skippers when she dominated the South Shore League.

South laxers repeat as BSG gold medalists

Billerica, and traditional powers St. John's Prep, Acton-Boxboro, Concord-Carlisle, the Holderness School and Phillips Andover – 13-9 in the championship match on Sunday at Wentworth Institute.

"We had greater depth and balance than anyone we faced," said coach Terry Kahn. "It's a testament to the quality of play in our region, and to the fact that our players – maybe because they know each other from league and youth play – were able to mesh so well as a team."

In the gold medal game, North scored in the first minute off goalie Garrett Curran (Hull/Catholic Memorial), but South connected on three in a row to take a 3-1 first quarter lead. Hingham's Drew Sowyrda found teammate Ben Prime for the first tally. Marshfield attackman Shea Coakley scored an unassisted goal. And with a minute left in the period, Hingham midfielder Greg Paul – who, with 14 points (6 goals, 8 assists), would be the team's high-scorer for the tournament – found Cohasset attackman Curt Kahn free on the crease and fed him a pass that Kahn quicksticked into the upper corner.

The South maintained its two-goal lead at the half, getting second-period scores from Scituate midfielder Jarrett Dawson and Weymouth midfielder Jo Jo Camillo., off a pass from Boston College High midfielder Pat Canty. Camillo, who missed almost all the spring season with a broken collarbone, was the offensive star of the championship game, scoring a hat trick. Kahn would have a pair of goals, while Paul would get three assists.

Camillo scored his second with three minutes left in the third period, but North made its run and tied the game at 6-6 with just 23 seconds left in the quarter. Then Braintree's Mike Aylward made the play of the day for the South, winning the ensuing face-off, passing to Paul, and taking the return feed to beat Beverly goalie Larry Kline. It was a lead that South would never again lose.

Three-and-a-half minutes into the final period, Camillo picked up his third on a rocket from 29 yards out. Cohasset midfielder Matt Davis followed 30 seconds later with a goal at the end of a terrific one-man rush through a pair of defenders. And 18 seconds after that, Weymouth attackman Matt Murray scored off a Paul pass. Kahn, midfielder Steve Williams (Scituate/Deerfield Academy) and Curran, who by now had shifted to midfield, finished out the scoring.

"While our offense was sensational, you can't say enough about our defense," observed coach Kevin Orcutt. "We built it around two Bay State Games veterans – Cohasset's Nick Spirito and Milton's Gerard Dhooge – and then got great play from Nick Doherty (Milton/BC High), Rory Baldini (Milton/Milton Academy), Andrew Keefe (Weymouth) and Andrew Pepin (Medfield). We were very fortunate to have two defensive specialists as our assistant coaches, Emerson College's Stu Curran and Medfield's Bob Aronson. And even more important, to have perhaps the three best goalies in the tournament all on the same team."

Curran, Nate Hammond (Hingham) and Todd Faiella (Marshfield) combined to stop 96 of the 133 shots taken on net – a gaudy .722 percentage in a sport where anything over .600 is considered good. Curran also had a pair of goals, and Faiella played a solid longstick defense in the tournament's opening game against Coastal.

Among the Games highlights:

Four goals apiece by Kahn and Prime in the opening victory over Coastal, in which South trailed 4-3 at the end of the first quarter, the only time the team fell behind for more than a minute during the tournament.

A 14-save, three-goals-allowed performance by Faiella in the first contest with North, a game in which 10 different South players scored in the 11-8 win.

Four hat tricks – Aylward, Paul, Williams and Coakley – in the 17-6 victory over Metro.

Four goals apiece by Prime and Sowyrda in the 13-7 romp over West.

Faceoff domination by Canty, Williams, Aylward and Cohasset's Robert Hickey, with terrific support from longsticks Pepin, Spirito and Baldini.

Prime wound up as South's leading goal scorer with 10, followed by Camillo (9), Kahn (8), Williams (7), and Coakley, Sowyrda and Paul (6 apiece).

"As great a win as it was for the players," said coach Kahn, "we also owe a debt of gratitude to the town for allowing us to host the tryouts and team practices, and to our volunteers who managed the tryouts and the administrative details – Cohasset's Lyn and Joe Previte, Rose Kahn and Scituate's Pam Dawson. I wish they'd given us more medals to pass out."

TRUE BLUE

Summer bash benefits South Shore Women's Center

By Mark Skala
STAFF WRITER

Every late July on a warm evening under a white tent Mount Blue restaurant serves up the summer's most popular fare and the main ingredients are music, food and charity.

For the sixth straight year the Norwell restaurant will host its summer benefit featuring premier entertainers with Bellevue Cadillac headlining this year's "who's who on the South Shore" party on July 29 from 6 to 9 p.m. Bellevue Cadillac will be joined by Virgil Kane and the Joe Leary band.

And if that tempting entertainment doesn't work, try a sampling of some of the foods prepared by the restaurant staff for what has become known as the season's most visible event in the area. Combine all that with helping out a non-profit organization and you've got a recipe that's a winner.

This year's event benefits the South Shore Women's Center, a group dedicated to helping women and families of domestic violence. Its mission is once again a rallying cause for a number of artists, restaurant owners and businesses who are supporting the event.

"As always, the community is being extremely generous," says Mount Blue Partner Jayne Bowe. "I hope this year's is another sellout because I feel so strongly about the work the center does."

Bowe and her Mount Blue staff will do everything possible to make that sellout a reality. Restaurant staffers see this as the night to be on top of their game, Bowe says, and they like seeing the restaurant shine.

"The staff at Mount Blue talk about this party all year long and always go way out of their way to donate their time and money," said Bowe.

"As always, the community is being extremely generous. I hope this year's is another sellout because I feel so strongly about the work the (South Shore Women's) center does."
Mount Blue Partner
Jayne Bowe

It's also the talk of the town thanks to the efforts of the restaurant crew and the many vendors who supply food and libations. Then there's the silent auction featuring local artists, including Jack Horan, gift certificates from area restaurants and the main attraction — a drum head signed by all the members of Aerosmith and 2 T-shirts signed by Steven Tyler and Joe Perry. There's also two tickets to Aerosmith's concert Aug 26 at the Fleet Center on the block.

"Everybody has really come through," said Bowe. "Our community charities are a real draw."

They're also big winners from the event. Bill Stanton, executive director of the North and South Rivers Watershed Association, knows that first hand having been the charity of choice two summers ago.

"It was a wonderful event for us because it brought us in contact with people who were aware of us but didn't knows about us," said Stanton, noting the environmental group attracted 50 new members from that event as well as funds to lay the ground work for a river camp for children. "It made a difference for us."

The YMCA in Hanover used its turn on the Mount Blue stage last year to tell its story and raise money for a teen center at the newly renovated Hanover facility. "Non-profits don't usually get an audience like that and it gave us a chance to show we are not just a health club, but so much more."

The South Shore Women's Center also wants to make full use of the spotlight cast on it. Center executive director Barbara Fuyat sees the benefit serving a two-fold purpose — raising awareness and funds. The added funding comes at a particularly important time, she says, given the agency's recent cutbacks due to state budget shortfall.

"Like every other non-profit we are seeing a funding squeeze," she explained. "The funding is great, but just as important is the awareness this kind of event will bring. It's huge. This issue is still very humiliating, embarrassing and shameful to many victims and is kept a secret. An event we can use to call attention to our efforts and the numbers of people we help generally opens up eyes."

Last year alone, the center — providing emergency services, counseling and support, advocacy and community education and training — served more than 8,000 women and children in its 15-town coverage area.

Fuyat sees domestic violence as a serious problem in South Shore towns and echoed words from Governor Weld years back when he declared the issue a state of emergency. That's why she couldn't be happier to be the charity of choice.

"The fact that we have been chosen to benefit is overwhelming and we appreciate it so much," she said.

Funds from the event will go directly to the many direct services such as counseling and a children's program for those who have witnessed violence at home. The evening's silent auction proceeds will be used toward the group's capital campaign, a $400,000 effort to pay for a building purchased in Kingston last year.

"We can't wait for the event. We've heard so much about it and know the effort that goes into it," Fuyat said.

Tickets for the summer gala on July 29 can be purchased by calling Mount Blue at (781) 659-0050 or by sending your check and reservation information directly to Mount Blue at P.O. Box 916, Norwell, 02061.

Bellevue Cadillac will headline this year's summer party at Mount Blue. The July 29 event will benefit The South Shore Women's Center which is dedicated to helping women and families who have faced domestic violence.

David Cassidy makes Music Circus tour stop

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

In a phone conversation Monday morning from his Las Vegas home, David Cassidy apologizes for having to reschedule his interview with Living from Sunday night. The postponement is understandable when you consider Cassidy just endured a 22-hour flight from the UK, and has only a few days off at home, before he has to hit the road again for concerts on the East Coast —including his upcoming July 21 performance at the South Shore Music Circus.

And yet, despite everything, the singer maintains a palpable enthusiasm for his work.

"I can honestly say that this is the best time of my life and career because now I'm doing more stuff that I have always wanted to do," said Cassidy, 52. "Life is very good for me, both personally and professionally."

"I can honestly say that this is the best time of my life and career because now I'm doing more stuff that I have always wanted to do. Life is very good for me, both personally and professionally."
David Cassidy

Cassidy is more than a little familiar with professional success. The son of performers Jack Cassidy and Evelyn Ward, David Cassidy first shot to stardom in 1970 on the ABC-TV sitcom "The Partridge Family," which co-starred his stepmother Shirley Jones. While portraying 16-year-old Keith Partridge lead singer of a family that hits it big in the music business, Cassidy had chart-topping hits with "Doesn't Somebody Want To Be Wanted," "I Woke Up In Love This Morning" and "I Think I Love You," the best-selling song of 1971.

As a solo artist, Cassidy has had hit singles on "Cherish," "How Can I Be Sure," "Rock Me Baby," "Could It Be Forever" and "Lying to Myself."

Cassidy's latest album, "Then and Now" was released by Decca in October 2001 and has since gone platinum. The CD features 22 songs, including newly recorded versions of Cassidy classics as well as new material. Not wanting to tamper too much with his earlier success, Cassidy returned to the same studio where he originally recorded his hits, rounded up the same back-up singers and musicians and even sang into the same microphone. Recording technology may have advanced considerably in the last 30 years, but that doesn't stop Cassidy from wanting to keep it simple.

"I write music the old-fashioned way with just a guitar and a cassette recorder. You really can't replace the spontaneity of just playing something live. When I record my part, I do it in a vocal booth with just me and my guitar." The entertainer may be most at home in a recording studio or on the concert stage, but television is what made him a star.

During the four-year-run of "The Partridge Family," Cassidy graced every teen magazine cover in the world. His official fan club grew to become the largest ever, exceeding those for Elvis Presley and the Beatles. By the 1974 end of the series, however, even fame wasn't enough to keep Cassidy interested in his television alter ego.

"People thought that because I didn't want to go back and do it anymore that I didn't like it or that I was bitter. I never was," Cassidy explains. "I loved it. I just wanted to do other things. I never felt anything but love and respect for how good it was, for what it was."

Cassidy survived divorce and career downturn in the late 1970s and early 1980s, but always found his way back. Since 1987, Cassidy has been happily married to songwriter Sue Shifrin-Cassidy. They are the parents of an 11-year-old son, Beau. In 1994, Cassidy joined half-brother, Shaun, in "Blood

Science center exhibit making a splash this summer

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

As a gallery exhibit theme, the subject of water is both timely and timeless.

In the case of "The Nature of Water," an artists collective, multimedia exhibit on view at the South Shore Science Center in Norwell through the end of August, the timeliness is in effect for summer, when most activities are water-related. What's timeless is water being not only the generally acknowledged source of earthly life, but also, accordingly, a source of fertile artistic and creative interpretation.

The show contains 28 works by seven South Shore artists who are also current or former employees at the Frame Center in Hanover, a custom-framing shop also specializing in matting, frame repair and mirror fitting. Christine Sullivan, of Pembroke, a spokesperson for the Frame Center staff, describes the group exhibit project as an outlet for its participants to take a break from business and get some creative juices flowing again.

"All of us have had training and professional backgrounds in art. So earlier this year we came up with the idea of doing a show together, and we began bouncing ideas off each other at work, like what kind of a theme to focus on, what kind of media to include and so forth.," Sullivan said.

"What's good about this show, we think, is that everyone has a different style for both creative approach and chosen media. So

Rich Custard with Balsamic Strawberries

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A baked custard is one of those ubiquitous desserts that has many forms in many different cultures. Make it with a caramelized sugar syrup and it is Crème Caramel. Bake it in a casserole with a bit of nutmeg and it is a classic American custard. Add more eggs and a topping of bruléed sugar and you have a Crème Brulee.

The simplest, approach, however, is simply to bake custard in individual ramekins and then serve it with fresh fruit which for the perfect summer dessert. To this end, I adapted my basic custard recipe from Crème Caramel simply leaving out the sugar syrup. My tests had concluded that equal proportions of milk and half and half were best, plus 3 whole eggs and 3 egg yolks. A water bath is necessary to moderate the heat so that the outside of the custard does not overcook and become tough.

To make this dessert special, I adapted flavors from a recipe from the well-known restaurant Tra Vigne in Napa Valley. The combination of cinnamon and ginger is unusual and works nicely with the strawberries tossed in balsamic vinegar. If you like, you can serve this custard in the ramekins but without the fruit.

RICH CUSTARD WITH BALSAMIC STRAWBERRIES

Make sure that the custard is just set in the center before taking it from the oven, otherwise it will be hard to unmold. Also be sure to butter the ramekins for easy removal. You can also serve this custard directly in the ramekins although the presentation is better if unmolded and surrounded by fruit.

For The Custard

1 1/2 cups milk

1 1/2 cups light cream or half and half

1 cup sugar

1/8 teaspoon salt

1 teaspoon vanilla

3/4 teaspoon cinnamon

1/2 teaspoon ground ginger

3 whole eggs

3 egg yolks

For The Strawberries

1 pint strawberries, washed, hulled and sliced

1 teaspoon balsamic vinegar

Coarsely ground black pepper

1. Heat the oven to 325 degrees. Put a kettle of water on to boil. Lightly butter six 6-ounce custard cups and place them on a kitchen towel in a roasting pan.

2. In a small saucepan, stir the milk, cream, sugar, and salt together over medium heat until the sugar is dissolved and the mixture reaches 140 degrees on an instant read thermometer. (It should be very hot but not yet at a simmer.) Whisk in the vanilla, cinnamon and ginger, and remove from heat.

3. Beat the whole eggs and yolks to blend in a large bowl. Gradually add the hot cream mixture, whisking constantly. Strain into a large measuring cup or bowl with a spout. (Some of the cinnamon will be left behind in the strainer - this is okay.) Pour the custard mixture into the prepared custard cups. Bake until the custards are set, 40 to 50 minutes. They should be barely set in the center, but do not underbake since they have to be unmolded when cold. Chill until cold.

4. To serve, slip a butter knife around the edge of each custard to loosen invert onto individual plates. Surround each serving with sliced strawberries tossed with balsamic vinegar and a dash of coarse ground pepper. Serves 4

Maintaining the July landscape

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

For many perennial gardeners, the July garden is the highlight of the growing season. Dazzling displays of daylilies paint the landscape with riotous colors, each day new flowers lifting their majestic trumpet-shaped flowers skyward to proclaim the majestic beauty of the summer border. Delightful daisies, large and small, offer colorful complements, attracting throngs of butterflies that perch on their petals while sipping nectar from the multitude of tiny flowers in the central disks. Bright gold false sunflowers (Heliopsis), pink and white coneflowers (Echinacea), lavender Stokes asters (Stokesia), and snow white shasta daisies (Leucanthemum) highlighted by yellow centers offer continuous blooms for weeks to come. The stunning spires of rosy purple gayfeathers (Liatris), blue veronicas, and lavender catmints (Nepeta) provide pleasing contrasts. Boisterous beebalms in vivid shades red, pink, and violet entice butterflies and hummingbirds to hover at their unique whorled flower heads. A stroll through the garden on a warm July morning with birds singing, dew sparkling like tiny jewels on the delicate strands of ornamental grasses, and flowers everywhere, is heaven on earth.

Despite bountiful moisture during the early half of June, rainfall has been sparse in recent weeks as water restrictions become more widespread. Parched lawns and gardens are beginning to show signs of stress. Much to my surprise, even my weeds are wilted, emphasizing the level of moisture deprivation. Established plants can usually cope with occasional periods of drought but special attention should be given to trees, shrubs and perennials newly planted this season.

Most sprinkler systems do not provide adequate moisture to the deeper root systems of trees and shrubs. Place a hose at the base of recently planted trees and shrubs or any plants showing the effects of drought stress and allow it to trickle for an extended period of time until it drenches the root system of the plant. Should your community have water restrictions which require hand held hoses, small buckets of water can be gradually administered to a moat formed around the base of new trees and shrubs. Thoroughly soak the rootball two to three times a week during dry periods and high heat.

Container grown plants require regular watering and by July during hot weather, those growing in full sun may need to be watered as often as twice a day.

Container grown plants require regular watering and by July during hot weather, those growing in full sun may need to be watered as often as twice a day. Wilting is usually a sign of the need for water, but soggy plants will also wilt and some plants will appear limp during the heat of the day even when they are sufficiently watered. Always feel the soil before watering as too much water can lead to rot. Constant irrigation leaches nutrients from the soil requiring the regular application of nutrients and a dilute application of liquid soluble fertilizers weekly is recommended. An alternative is to use products like Osmocote that can be applied to the soil surface and each time the plant is watered, fertilizer is distributed to the plants. One small scoop of these fertilizer crystals that look like tiny beads will generally provide nutrients for most of the growing season.

Drought stressed plants are more likely to suffer from insect infestations and gardeners should be on the lookout for pests, particularly spider mites which thrive during periods of hot, dry weather. The leaves on many of my clumps of tall garden phlox (P. paniculata) have become pale green, mottled and sickly looking. A closer inspection of the underside of their foliage revealed a stippled appearance, a typical indicator of spider mites. Severe infestations will produce telltale webs surrounding many of the leaves and stems. A stiff stream of water will dislodge the webs and help to alleviate the problem and an application of a light, horticultural oil is a safe and usually effective control for these microscopic pests which can barely be detected until much of their damage has been done.

This year's environmental conditions have been ideal for the formation of powdery mildew on many of the usual sources including tall phlox, beebalm and roses. Heat, humidity, drought, warm days and cool evenings, and overhead watering, especially late in the day, all promote the accumulation of mildew that looks as if a white powder had been sprinkled on the leaves of these plants. The plants may look unsightly and many of the leaves will yellow, turn brown and fall off but mildew will not usually cause the plants to die. Although fungicides can be used to reduce the disease, a weekly application of a baking soda spray (1 T/gal of water) will often alleviate the spread of mildew.

Weeds generally thrive, no matter what Mother Nature offers in the way of heat and moisture. Lurking in our borders, weeds deprive our more desirable plants of precious moisture and many of these invaders are in the process of forming plentiful quantities of seed. Carefully scrutinize each garden for undesirable wildflower intruders, extricating as many as possible. A huge stack of weeds and a freshly cultivated border are one of the most gratifying aspects of maintaining a garden.

Visit Tranquil Lake Nursery in Rehoboth on Sat., July 20 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. for its Annual Open House for a fun-filled day of activities including lectures on flower arranging, herbs, and perennials. Details of the event can be found at www.tranquil-lake.com. A variety of vendors will have perennials and herbs for sale or wander through the acres of beautiful daylilies and display gardens throughout the day.

we're presenting a common theme but with dramatically different styles. Plus it was a good way to get everyone working artistically again."

In regard to the chosen theme of water, the artists' group offers these observations.

"Water takes on many forms and can effect our lives in countless ways. Some works may concentrate on conceptual interpretations such as abstractions of molecules, the feeling of thirst, or the relief that a cool rainstorm may provide on a sweltering summer evening. Other works may focus on literal translations such as rivers, oceans, puddles, rain, steam or ice."

Some works are even concerned with social and economic issues associated with water, such as drought, water pollution, soil erosion and flooding. Most exemplary of these sub-themes are the series of attention-grabbing, abstract-toward-the-extreme works in oil on plaster and mixed media by Mark Slaven, of Weymouth, and on acrylic by Dave Perry, of Norwell.

Slaven's pieces, titled "Echoes 1" and "2," "Tidal Pool," "Cascade" and "Whitecaps," display the artist's liberal relief approach which dramatically brings out the physical aspects of his subjects, interpretably to portray certain adverse natural water effects in the "Echoes" works.

Perry's series, uniformly called "Untitled," are multi-colored, Pollockesque abstracts also interpretable in a similar mode as Slaven's "Echoes."

Other pieces are simple appreciation for the spirit of nature. Sullivan, in acrylic on canvas, offers a picturesque, splendored view of a "Catskill Waterfall, "then zeroes in on the detail of the region's aquatic plant life on "In a Catskill Stream." Watercolorist and acrylic artist Dina Brennan, of Pembroke, renders an idyllic, tranquil view of a rowboat anchored in a harbor in an untitled piece, and watercolorist Kris Brennen, of Duxbury, conveys luminescent abstract color on "Orange Sunset" and "Blue Green Water."

Other artists in the show include watercolorist Sally Pyle, of Norwell, and Pembroke native and acrylic artist Andrew Flight. Together, the artists attempt through quality work to interpret the place of water in nature, and perhaps to offer an aesthetic way to cool off during the summer months.

The Nature of Water will be on display in the South Shore Natural Science Center's Vine Hall Gallery through Aug. 31. The exhibit can be viewed Monday through Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The science center is located on Jacobs Lane in Norwell. For more information call (781) 659-2559.

Brothers" on Broadway and then on national tour. In 1996, Cassidy relocated to Las Vegas to star in the $75 million extravaganza, 'EFX" at the MGM Grand. Cassidy enjoyed a two year, sold-out run in that show. He went on to co-create "The Rat Pack is Back!" at the Sahara Hotel and Casino. He also co-created and starred in "At the Copa," which ran for a full year at the Rio Hotel. By 2001, however, Cassidy was ready to return to the road.

"Working in Las Vegas is fantastic, but it's also very grueling. You work all the time, six nights a week. I don't think I saw a prime-time television program for five years. The fans are really terrific, too, and I get to see so many of them when I travel. Touring has very real benefits," he says. "Instead of doing eight to 10 shows a week, I may do something like eight shows a month, which gives more time at home with my family."

His family often joins him on the road, and one day his son may even continue the Cassidy family tradition by entering show business.

"My son happens to have a really great voice. He's got great intonation and pitch. He plays the drums, too. He is 11, though, and right now baseball is his life, which I think is great. If and when he is ready, however, I will never discourage him from becoming a performer. He's been out with me and he loves it, but he also knows he can't do anything until he has at least finished college. I'm actually hoping he will go to Julliard, he is just that talented."

It remains to be seen, whether Cassidy's son will seek fame as an entertainer. In the meantime, the elder Cassidy has some advice for the teen idols of today who are currently basking in the limelight.

"What I always tell them is 'Don't give up your day job.' You won't be a teen idol for very long. It is important, too, to follow your own instincts. Managers, agents and record executives only know so much. You have to stay true to yourself. It is the work that drives any career, not the fame. You have to do it for you, You can't work only for the money. You can't let the money be the primary drive behind the career."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17

The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 12:47 a.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate in a week, July 24. The Libra moon becomes inactive at 6:58 a.m. At 10:13 a.m. the moon enters Scorpio, bringing a change of pace. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. This is a day to get things done. Stay upbeat and don't allow anyone or anything to throw you off track. A challenging lunar alignment to Mars occurs at 2:45 p.m. Use extra caution when driving or operating machinery.

THURSDAY, JULY 18

Take advantage of today's 'take care of business' mood. Don't procrastinate, because planetary action turns around completely tomorrow. Tackle jobs that need troubleshooting, problem-solving. You can get to the heart of a matter and work out the glitches. Make repairs, review and redo old projects. Influences are also favorable for making important decisions and starting new activities. Spend time alone; you can gain new insights to old problems.

FRIDAY, JULY 19

Astrological thunderstorms may occur this morning, when the serious Scorpio moon aligns with changeable Uranus at 10:34 a.m. and becomes inactive. Avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow. Relief arrives at 2:02 p.m., when the moon enters ebullient Sagittarius. In addition, the sun aligns with Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. Don't be a hermit tonight. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SATURDAY, JULY 20

A Sagittarius moon generates optimism and enthusiasm. This weekend tops the charts for partying and enjoying life to the fullest. An alignment of Mercury and Jupiter makes this morning prime for developing long-range plans, exploring options and setting new goals. There is one rough spot, however, between 2:57-5:57 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. Keep it light; don't make waves. The sun and Mercury conjoin at 9:47 p.m., highlighting all communications.

SUNDAY, JULY 21

Storm clouds move in between 6:05-9:05 a.m., when a moon/Saturn polarity occurs. After that astrological blue skies and sunshine return. The remainder of the day is prime for enjoying favorite leisure activities, spending quality time with friends and family. Spur of the moment ideas can be the most successful. Be more adventurous. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Uranus at 3:44 p.m. and becomes inactive. Mercury enters Leo at 6:41 p.m., remaining there until August 6. Influences begin to turn around again at 7:26 p.m., when the moon enters serious Capricorn.

MONDAY, JULY 22

A full moon buildup adds high energy and intensity in this period. The moon travels in Capricorn today and tomorrow, prompting you to be constructive, productive. Business or financial concerns can no longer be swept under the rug. Now is the time to take responsibility, face the facts of a situation and deal with it.

TUESDAY, JULY 23

Planetary action points to a challenging day. Don't get caught up in anger or worries; stay busy with practical projects. Hard work will pay off. Zero in on jobs that have been left hanging and finish them. Postpone acting on decisions or launching important ventures for a few days. Spend time alone. Instead of trying to change others or transform external situations, this is a time to look within, change your thinking and find a new course of action for yourself. The Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 11:05 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 24

Gear up for a hectic day. The moon enters Aquarius at 2:40 a.m. and the full moon culminates at 5:07 a.m. Venus forms a challenging 90-degree contact to Pluto at 8:38 a.m. Move cautiously in business or romance. Watch out for negative thinking, obsessing. In the afternoon the Aquarius moon opposes Mercury and Mars. Slow your pace. Don't act on impulse. Pay extra attention to details. A lunar alignment to Neptune this evening offers an opportunity to relax and unwind.

THURSDAY, JULY 25

Alignments of Mercury, Mars and Neptune in the next few days place all important decisions, signings, new beginnings off limits. Things may not be as they appear. It may be difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. Mercury and Mars conjoin at 11:20 a.m., making for a fast-paced morning. Stop, look and listen. The moon travels in Aquarius all day, highlighting group activities, humanitarian projects.

FRIDAY, JULY 26

The Aquarius moon aligns with Uranus at 7:46 a.m. and becomes inactive. In addition, a polarity of Mercury and Neptune, generates a sleepy, dreamy mood. This influence is fine for developing projects that require imaginative thinking. On the other hand, it may be difficult to concentrate on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. At 12:04 p.m. the moon enters laid-back Pisces, prompting you to get an early start to the weekend.

Cohasset Rotary Club, which has annually given a grant to the society to fund the program.

Courtney Hurley, who will be a sophomore next year and is working at the house for the first time, said it's a great summer job. She works two, three-hour shifts a week at the house, and said the benefits extend beyond the pay.

"I'm interested in history so working here has been great," she said.

Alison Fludder, also a sophomore working her first year at the Wilson home, said she enjoys giving people tours of the museum. She added learning about the history of Cohasset has made her more appreciative of the town she has grown up in.

"It's neat learning about how they lived back then," she said.

Second-year docent Peter Bunstein said while he's disappointed more people, especially Cohasset residents, don't come in to the house, it doesn't stop him from learning.

"Most people that come in aren't from the town," he said. "I would think more residents would be interested in the town's history."

According to the tour packet the docents have to study, Captain Wilson was born in August 1788 and became a master mariner. He captained a number of different ships, including merchant and fishing vessels. His ship and crew were once captured by British warships and had to be ransomed by the ship's owner in 1819.

The wooden house located in the heart of Cohasset village was built on town property in 1810 by area housewright David Nichols. Wilson purchased the house for the grand sum of $475 in 1810 and later bought the land from the town.

The first floor of the house was originally a ship chandlery selling marine supplies but eventually became living quarters for Wilson, his wife and their 10 children. Over the years, the first floor has seen use as a tea-room, gift shop, tailor ship, and a photography studio. The house was donated to the society in the mid 20th century and can be seen in the role of the "Eastwick Historical Society" in the movie "Witches of Eastwick."

Though the house isn't decorated with Wilson's belongings, it does contain period pieces such as a school desk dated near 1800, two-pronged forks as was common in Wilson's time, and other home furnishings. Along with guiding visitors through the two-story house, the docents also have to catalogue the objects contained in the house.

Along with cataloguing the items in the house, this year the docents have an extra duty. Peter has been photographing everything in the house to document its placement. The museum is about to undergo renovations and everything will need to be cleared out. With the pictures being taken, the hope is once the renovations are completed, the objects will go back exactly where they were.

All three of the society's buildings need repairs. The Lothrop House at 14 Summer St. needs the roof repaired as well as an exterior paint job. The Maritime Museum, on Elm Street next to the Wilson House, needs upgraded lighting, display cases, and signage. Drainage problems at the Wilson House need to be corrected.

Bassing Beach closed

No swimming due to bacteria count

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The word for the bacteria may be a mouthful – but that's just what health officials don't want you to do.

Enterococci levels – the red flag when testing for bacteria at town beaches – are too high in the harbor at Bassing Beach, Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said. Therefore, the beach is closed for swimming until further notice.

Health effects related to swimming in polluted waters could include ear infections, conjunctivitis and rashes. The most common ailment is gastro-intestinal disorders, stemming from swimmers swallowing water.

Bassing Beach, which attracts boaters who pull their boats ashore there to swim, is popular with Cohasset and Scituate residents.

Weekly water samples for Bassing Beach are taken from the end of the Cohasset Sailing Club dock, Godzik explained.

Testing results that close beaches to swimming can occur in two ways. If tests reveal a one-time "spike" of more than 104 colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters o f water is one way. Also, if tests over a five-week period reveal a "mean" that is higher than 34 colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters of water. Bassing Beach

Local anti-40B group takes root

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Monday night, residents driving by Shaw's plaza night may have seen a light on in Cohasset Travel and thought someone was working overtime. However, it wasn't someone slaving away trying to plan an exquisite vacation for a lucky traveler, but a group of concerned residents gathered to fight what they feel is a poorly written law.

The group, which is gaining momentum, is interested in changing Chapter 40B, a statute that sets a 10 percent goal of affordable housing for each community.

"We need to start taking a more pro-active approach to controlling what happens in our community," said Michael Wescott, a member of the Growth and Development Committee and organizer of the group. "There are some real concerns about affordable housing but this law does not address them, it is very poorly written."

The law, sometimes dubbed the "Anti-snob Zoning Act", renders many of the town's zoning regulations inapplicable in exchange for setting aside 20-25 percent units for affordable housing. The statute is applicable in towns where the affordable housing stock makes up less than 10 percent of a town's entire housing. Cohasset has about 3 percent, or 76 units of affordable housing.

"When 40B was passed I was in the third-grade. It's no longer a good law and no longer fits into the communities it's trying to help."

— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

Julie Guild, a resident of Jerusalem Road, was very concerned about the possibility of AvalonBay coming to Cohasset.

AvalonBay plans to build a 254-unit luxury apartment complex at the 62-acre former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor site off Rt. 3A (across from Atlantic Bagel). The size and scope of the project and the fact that it will be build on one of the few remaining tracts of industrial zoned land in town have Guild and many others, up in arms.

"I feel it will really change the character of the town," Guild said. "I don't think people realize how significantly this will affect the town."

At the meeting, which drew about 15 people, residents brainstormed ideas searching different avenues to pursue to stop AvalonBay. There is legislation that both state Rep. Garrett Bradley and state Sen. Bob Hedlund have introduced which should be voted on before the end of the month that aims to give more power back to local zon-

Schools may get lesson in obesity

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Do you always get french-fries instead of a salad? Do you find yourself driving to the village instead of walking? If so, you're not alone.

Obesity is a national concern with recent studies showing that more than ever Americans are overeating and not getting enough exercise.

Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik says even little Cohasset isn't immune to the life-threatening condition..

"Are there children in our schools who are obese?" he asked. "The answer is certainly."

Godzik plans to work with various officials in town as well as the schools to make some changes.

"People just aren't aware about the dangers of obesity," he said. "We're trying to educate them."

The perils of obesity are far reaching. Heart problems, diabetes, high blood pressure and accelerated joint deterioration have all been associated with the excess weight.

Godzik said he spoke with school officials about the possibility of including healthier options on the school menu. He says the menu often includes a variety of fatty foods without a healthy alternative.

"If kids get in the habit of eating poorly every day it's tough to break that cycle," Godzik said.

Godzik's goal is to try and reduce obesity while encouraging physical activity.

"It's a good idea for parents to encourage kids to get out of the house," he said. "Instead of playing a video game they could

Forest Avenue sidewalk update

Town Manager Mark Haddad informed selectmen the bid for the Forest Avenue sidewalk construction came in more than $100,000 over budget. Town Meeting had appropriated $190,000 for the project and the lowest bid came in at $320,000. Haddad said there are two options the board should consider. The selectmen could either re-bid the project for half of the sidewalk or re-bid for the entire sidewalk and then go back before Town Meeting to ask for more money.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she thought the town should only begin construction on the sidewalk if it can complete the project.

"If we need a sidewalk on Forest Avenue let's get one," she said. "If the finances don't look right maybe we should wait but I don't we should do half of it."

Selectman Merle Brown agreed.

"I would like to see the entire sidewalk done at once," he said. "If we can't do it now, let's wait."

The discussion was tabled until a future meeting.

Legislators encourage comments on runway

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Area residents only have a few more days to register comments about the FAA's plans to add a new runway to Logan Airport. The comment period for residents ends on July 28.

Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, attended the selectmen's meeting on Tuesday and updated the board on the progress of the runway.

"There's a lot that the public can do," Bradley said. "People need to be verbal on this, the decision has not been made yet."

Hedlund encouraged the board to write a letter to US Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, asking where he stands on the issue and asking him for help.

"You should try and get the otner South Shore communities to join with you in writing the letter," Hedlund said. "The first sentence could be, 'We need your help.'"

Massport wants to add a new runway to reduce delays but opponents believe that this would increase the jet noise and pollution in the area due to the expected tripling of flights over the South Shore.

The runway, 14/32, is expected to cause numerous problems for Cohasset residents. According to Ralph Dormitzer, a member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, the number of flights would increase over Cohasset, from 630 to 970 a day, if runway 14/32 became a reality. He also identified the impacts the runway may have on residents, including sleep deprivation, anxiety and a possible loss of property value.

"People need to be verbal on this, the decision has not been made yet."
— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

Dormitzer, a Cohasset resident, said he's doing as much as he can to raise awareness about this runway.

"We're taking any angle we can to try and stop this project," he said. "We need all the help we can get, people should write letters, call and do whatever it takes to make Massport see that this isn't the only solution to its problems."

Bradley is asking residents to either submit written comments directly to him, which he will forward to the FAA, or to write on their own to:

John C. Silva, Manager of Federal Aviation Administration Environmental Projects, Airport Division, ANE-600, New England Region, 12 New England Executive Park, Burlington, MA 01803.

The FAA will issue a final record of its decision once the comment period ends.

A few weeks ago the FAA supported a "compromise" plan which would limit the runway's use to days when winds from the northwest cause delays on other Logan runways.

"That's no compromise," Dormitzer said. "There's no proof that they would actually follow up on that."

tests show a mean over five weeks of 40, meaning the conditions are consistently less than ideal.

Godzik said the harbormaster will be flying a yellow pennant to warn boaters until the numbers come down. He decided not to post signs because last year when the beach was closed after a single "spike" in enteroccocci, the signs were taken down or stolen within several hours.

"We just want to inform them there is greater risk to swim there for ear, eye and gastro-intestinal infections."
— Dr. Joseph Godzik, health agent

Tests for bacteria by the sewer treatment plant and at Cohasset Harbor Marina have been OK. Results by the yacht club, which is not a swimming area, have exceeded the standard. Godzik isn't sure what is causing the unacceptable levels at Bassing Beach and the yacht club, but said the warmer the water gets, the longer bacteria can survive.

"We're not going to drag people out of the water," he said about Bassing Beach. "We just want to inform them there is greater risk to swim there for ear, eye and gastro-intestinal infections."

Tests results at Sandy Beach have been fine, he said.

Fishers are moving into the area

Two sightings reported so far

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Many local people have never heard of fisher cats.

According to MassWildlife — fishers, also called fisher cats — aren't cats at all but are members of the weasel-minx-otter family.

But David Shepard of Dorchester is very familiar with fishers. He hails from Michigan and likes to hunt and fish, and has seen many of the elusive animals, but never this far east.

So Shepard was surprised to see one in Wompatuck State Park — a sighting which may be the second in as many weeks in the Hingham area.

"It saw me and I saw him. There was absolutely no question in my mind what it was."
— Dave Shepard

"I fish in Wompatuck State Park every weekend," he said.. At about 1 p.m., Sunday, July 14, while Shepard was in his flat-bottomed boat in the northeast corner of the Aaron River Reservoir, he noticed the geese were acting skittish. "I also noticed a goose belly up with its head gone," he said.

The week before a "large brown cat," now thought to be a fisher, was spotted crossing Rockland Street in Hingham by a woman, who had to stop her car to let it cross.

Shepard said he looked up and saw a fisher standing on the rocky cliff at the edge of the pond. It quickly ran behind a tree and peered back at him.

"It saw me and I saw him," said Shepard, adding at the closest point the fisher was 15-20 yards away. "There was absolutely no question in my mind what it was."

William Davis, wildlife biologist with MassWildlife at the field headquarters in Westboro, says fishers are expanding their range, although the state doesn't have a good handle on their distribution. He describes the animal as dark brown, with rounded ears and a long tail that makes up one-third or more of the animal's body length. Fishers are about three feet long, including the tail, and males can weigh up to 20 pounds.

Davis surmises the fisher in Wompatuck was likely waiting for the dead goose to drift ashore and that's why the fisher, which is more active at dawn and dusk, would have been out in the middle of the day. He said it would have been unlikely the fisher killed the bird because if it had, it would have fed on it and tried to stash it somewhere.

"He (Shepard) was very lucky to have seen one because they are incredibly secretive," Davis said.

Fishers, which disappeared from Massachusetts in the late 1890s due to decreasing woodland habitat and over hunting, are becoming abundant in the state again and are very common in the counties along the New Hampshire border and in the western part of the state near New York.

"Fishers are very adaptable to woodland habitat and colonize areas they find suitable," Davis explained.

That's no surprise to Hilary Penlington, the animal control officer in Norfolk, which is due west of Hingham and Cohasset, near Foxboro and Franklin.

She had her first report of a fisher sighting about 18 months ago.

"They're here," Penlington said. "There have been about 10 more sightings and a couple (of fishers) have become permanent residents in town."

She describes the fisher as having the facial features of a cat with a dachshund-like body with a long tail, like a fox.

Penlington thinks recent mild winters have greatly contributed to the rise in population of fishers and other wild animals such as foxes, raccoons and skunks – many of which are no longer feeling threatened by humans.

Davis, the state wildlife biologist, agrees that mild winters have made survival of a range of animals' young much easier.

"The mild winters bring the adults through in good shape without depleting their fat reserves so they have larger litters and the litter survival rates are good too," he said.

Davis says fishers are very quick predators, are agile climbers and like to loaf around in trees. He said fishers, whose luxurious pelts can be sold to the garment industry, can be legally trapped in Massachusetts during a highly regulated hunting season. They are inquisitive animals and are therefore susceptible to the box-type trap that must be checked every 24 hours, Davis said.

According to a wildlife profile on the University of New Hampshire Cooperative Extension Web site, fishers are carnivorous, preferring small mammals, but will eat whatever comes along including birds, amphibians, insects, fruits, nuts and carrion. They can travel up to 60 square miles in search of food and are solitary except during the mating season.

Cliff Boyle of Rockland Street in Hingham notified the Hingham Journal after his neighbor reported seeing a "large brown cat" cross the street onto his property on July 7. The neighbor thought it might have been a mountain lion, but mountain lions haven't been sighted in the state since the mid-1800s. It was described as a "big, brown cat with rounded ears."

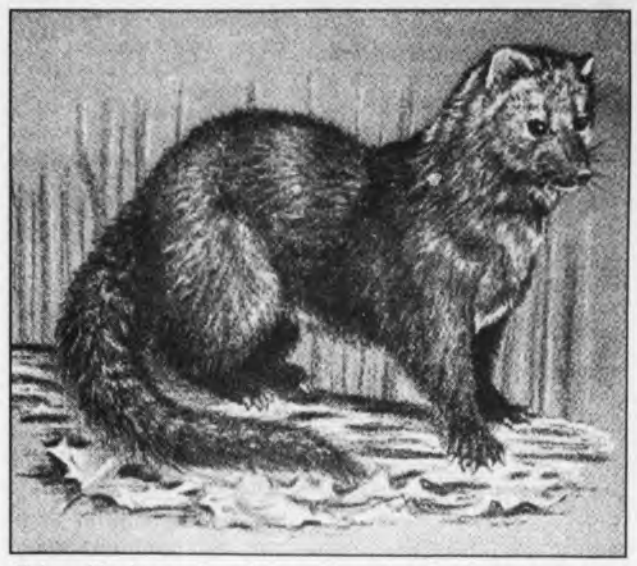
Shepard, the man fishing in Wompatuck, said he went to work Monday, July 15 to share the news about seeing the fisher. He said no one there really knew what he was talking about.

"But one of the guys I work with lives in Hingham," Shepard said. The next day, the surprised Hingham co-worker came back with a copy of the Hingham Journal which ran a story about the Rockland Street sighting with an illustration of the fisher in the July 11 issue.

"'See, I told you' I said to him," Shepard said.

Hingham Animal Control Officer Al Currie said the July 7 call came in as a mountain lion.

"Believe me if it were a mountain lion, everybody would know about it," he said, adding he, too, had never heard of fishers until he read the news report.



Fishers, like the one shown here, are becoming abundant again in the state. Two separate sightings have been reported in Hingham.

ing and planning boards.

There were also some legal options discussed at the meeting including the potential negative impact to Lily Pond and the lost tax revenue that would occur from the destruction of the industrially zoned land. The group is also considering approaching the Community Preservation Committee for money to potentially buy some of the land Avalon is eyeing.

"There are ways to stop a 40B project from coming into a community," said Bradley. "I'm doing what I can to try and rework the statute to where it does what it was intended to do."

The group also talked about trying to create a 2 percent annual increase in affordable housing, about 55 units, that would stall any 40B plans.

Hedlund said in a telephone interview that he has taken a proactive approach to fighting 40B but many other legislators aren't paying attention. He said it's clear that developers are using this statute as a tool to make profit and not to create affordable housing.

"When 40B was passed I was in the third-grade," Hedlund, 40, said. "It's no longer a good law and no longer fits into the communities its trying to help."

The Cohasset group agrees that the goal of increasing affordable housing, and especially senior housing, is a good one but feels the current law is written for developers.

"It effectively puts all the control and leverage in the hands of developers who simply exploit its loopholes for profit," Wescott wrote in a packet he distributed at the meeting. "It is the communities and those who truly need affordable housing that suffer."

He urged more of the town officials to become involved in the effort.

"Cohasset faces a very real threat," he said. "It's unfortunate that town management, many on the Board of Selectmen and Zoning Board of appeals are doing little to fight this."

There have been citizen groups, which have formed in the Commonwealth, that have been successful in fighting 40B including those in Martha's Vineyard and Duxbury.

"Many communities throughout the state are fighting this law because it provides a sledgehammer to developers and removes control from the local communities it was designed to serve," Wescott said.

At the end of the meeting, after the gathered participants had separated into work groups, Westcott said he hoped they would all return and when they do, they bring at least one friend with them.

"It's important to have this group keep growing and keep making noise," he said. "This is only the beginning."

The next meeting of the group will be Aug. 5 at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset Travel in Shaw's plaza.

Various town and state officials attending included state Bradley; Kate Putney representing Hedlund's office; and Marshfield resident and Democratic candidate state senate, Ted LeClair; Selectman Merle Brown; Planning Board member Peter Pratt; Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick; and Chairman of the Senior Housing Committee Joe Nedrow.

Schools may get lesson in obesity shoot some baskets or instead of watching television, they could go for a walk."

School Health Education Coordinator Dr. Mike Gill said the schools are very interested at looking at the issue.

"In my eyes we send our kids mixed messages about health on a national level," he said. "On one hand, we educate them about the dangers of eating poorly and on the other, we only offer certain foods in the cafeteria."

Gill said today's youths don't get enough exercise and part of the school's responsibilities include educating students about obesity.

It's apparent that something needs to be done.

It a recent study released by the Center for Disease Control, researchers found that obesity-related hospital costs increased threefold over a 20-year period. The study shows the problems are causing a major economic healthcare burden, in addition to having an effect on individual health.

According to the report more than 60 percent of adults in the United States, are overweight or obese, but the problem is not limited to those 18 and older. Obesity has tripled among children in the past two decades.

Godzik hopes to plan an event for National School Lunch week which begins Oct. 7. He wants to invite Mark Fenton, the editor of Walking Magazine, to speak.

"It's important that the risks associated with obesity be taught at an early age," Godzik said. "Sometimes people just don't know what the dangers are and what they can do about it."

State is fourth slimmest in the nation

By Rick Collins
RICK.COLLINS@STATEHOUSENEWS.COM

Poor Bay State residents are almost twice as likely to be obese as rich people, according to a study released Tuesday by state health officials. But weight problems aren't just relegated to the poor. According to the study, presented at a meeting of the state's Public Health Council, 64 percent of all men and 42 percent of all women are overweight — a 30 percent increase in the last decade.

"This is literally and figuratively a growing concern in our society," said public health commissioner Howard Koh. "This is a preventable epidemic that fuels other epidemics."

Severe weight problems can lead to higher rates of certain types of cancer, hypertension, and diabetes, officials said.

Overall, however, the state is the fourth slimmest in the nation. The findings were based on results compiled by researchers who randomly polled by telephone more than 8,000 people in 2000. Of those questioned, 21 percent on those who earned less than $25,000 a year were obese, according to the body mass index, a measure of weight in relation to height. The incidence of obesity dropped to 13 percent in people making more than $75,000.

Health officials say the difference is probably due to choices made by low-income people. Sally Fogerty, assistant public health commissioner, said that when five boxes of pasta cost the same as five bananas, shoppers on a tight budget will choose the more filling, but carbohydrate-laden pasta.

"If you look at what's available to all individuals, it may be difficult for those with low incomes to make these healthy choices," said Fogerty. She said the state needs to educate low-income people that their shopping decisions have health consequences, and that the most inexpensive purchases may not be the best. Fogerty also said accessibility to walking paths and health clubs may clarify obesity rates between rich and poor.

But Fogerty attributed the state's overall weight problem to the increasing trend towards unhealthy foods. She said that before the meeting she went to a local cookie store and purchased various cookies. "I asked some of the people upstairs which cookie they'd want and they all said this one," Fogerty said, holding up the biggest cookie of the bunch.

Even though health officials said the best way to battle health problems is through increased exercise and intake of fruits and vegetables, the study's results showed modest results among people who followed that prescription only.

The occurrence of weight problems dropped from 67 percent to 58 percent among men and 43 percent to 41 percent among women who eat at least five servings of fruits and vegetables a day. Exercise lowered the rates from 65 percent to 62 percent among men and 46 percent to 34 percent among women. Fogerty said the results could be marred because those polled may have been dishonest in giving their actual weights. She also said people need to both exercise and eat better, not just one.

"Exercise alone isn't going to resolve it and eating good alone isn't going to resolve it," she said. "But there is a difference."

Health officials also released a study of the state's Women, Infants and Children (WIC) program that showed 43 percent of women were overweight or obese prior to their pregnancy and 51 percent gained more weight than recommended. The study also said one third of children between the ages of two and five are in risk of becoming overweight. The studies also found that:

Hispanic men (69 percent) and black women (64 percent) are most likely to be overweight. Black men (21 percent) and black women (31 percent) are most likely to be obese. Bay Staters without a high school education are twice as likely (24 percent) to be obese than those with college degrees (12 percent). More married men are classified with weight problems than single men (67 percent to 61 percent), but more single women than married women have weight problems (45 percent to 41 percent).

The rate of obesity didn't differ much by region. The Metrowest area reported the lowest incidence of obesity at 14 percent; Central Massachusetts was the highest at 19 percent. Hispanic children (38.7 percent) were more likely to be considered at risk of being overweight than any other racial group. Bay State children are less likely to be short for their age than their national counterparts.

Wellspring buys its quarters

Wellspring Multi Service Center, Inc. recently purchased the property at 814 Nantasket Ave. in Hull, which it has occupied for 14years.

"The purchase insures that Wellspring will have a permanent home for all its programs, under one roof," explained long-time Wellspring Board member, Roberta Ridolfi.

Keeping all of its programs in one location is important for Wellspring's clients. People coming to the Food Pantry often find themselves referred next door to the Crisis Counseling Program for guidance with other subsistence needs such as housing, healthcare, or dealing with a disability. Wellspring works with other local service organizations to provide referrals to appropriate outside agencies and services. Those shopping for clothes or household goods at the Thrift Shop learn of Wellspring's Adult Education Program, two doors down, and gain the education and skills they need to better their lives. Or, a woman finds help in leaving an abusive relationship through the counseling offered by Wellspring's Domestic Violence Program.

Wellspring also had a strong financial incentive to buy the building at 814 Nantasket.

"Property values in Hull have been rising, and Wellspring faced the possibility of a dramatic rise in rent had the previous owners sold the building to another party."

— Board Member Pam Wolfe

"Wellspring's Board of Directors is committed to keeping administrative costs low and ensuring that the money Wellspring receives goes directly into its community programs," said Board Member Pam Wolfe. "Property values in Hull have been rising, and Wellspring faced the possibility of a dramatic rise in rent had the previous owners sold the building to another party. Wellspring's Board determined that given the current commercial rental market, purchasing a property would provide substantial savings that could be invested in Wellspring's ongoing programs. The Board researched other possible sites in Hull, but no comparable site was available. We are very happy and excited to have purchased the home where Wellspring has served the community for so many years."

From its beginnings, Wellspring has been a place where people could bring their problems. Founded in 1985 by the late Rev. Diane Edson, Wellspring started out as a thrift shop in a single small storefront on L Street in Hull. Edson soon realized that the same people who needed warm clothing also needed food, and an emergency food pantry was established.

It's like a grandparent who keeps spoiling their grandchild.

After winning Town Meeting approval for money to build new ball fields, restoration work on the Maritime Museum and the Capt. John Wilson House, and $600,000 to be borrowed over 15 years to pay for an estimated of half the cost of three lots off Beach Street — the Community Preservation Committee is at it again.

The committee recently wrapped up the first phase of its review process and has collected three proposals from groups seeking money from the Community Preservation Fund.

The nine-member board, formed under the Community Preservation Act adopted by the town at the ballot box a year ago, is once again grappling with how to recommend spending the funds, which come from a 1.5 percent real estate tax surcharge and a state match. According to Michael Buckley, the town finance director, the fund should have about $600,000 by this fall's special Town Meeting.

Under the statute, a town must allocate 10 percent of the Community Preservation Fund for historic preservation, 10 percent for community housing and 10 percent for open space. The remaining 70 percent can go for any of the above including recreation.

Two of the three proposals before the committee right now are looking for funding for historic preservation.

However, the Senior Housing Committee, which is seeking the most money, wants to build affordable housing.

The Senior Housing Committee is currently looking at the possibility of an affordable senior housing project in Cohasset. The housing committee is eyeing a 10-acre parcel of town-owned land near Stop & Shop as a potential development for 50 units of housing for seniors.

According to Joe Nedrow, a member of the committee, the group has completed a feasibility study which determined units could be built in that site.

Two of the three proposals before the committee right now are looking for funding for historic preservation.

The committee's proposal before the CPC is a two-pronged approach. Its first request is for $10,000 for "developmental assistance" for building the complex. The second part of it's proposal asks for $2.2 million to be bonded over 20 years to fund all of the eligible construction costs associated with the project.

"Right now, financing is our biggest obstacle," Nedrow said. "This may be one of our best options to make this work."

Glenn Pratt, of the Cemetery Study Committee, has asked the committee for $20,000 to restore wrought-iron gates, a bracket, and a post for the Beechwood Cemetery.

The Beechwood Cemetery — built on land donated by early settlers Aaron Pratt and Isaac Bates back in the 18th century — is one of the most historic sites in town. The gates, which were located at each entrance, have been evaluated by an expert and deemed to be an exceptional example of the period, Pratt said in an earlier interview. The date of the cemetery's first burial area 1737, and the later expansion in 1874 are cast into the iron.

While the gates would undoubtedly add to the appearance of the site, their restoration is outside the Cemetery Study Committee's funding. The group recently completed major expansions and renovations at Woodside and Beechwood cemeteries, which dried up most of its funds.

CPC chairman Stuart Ivimey said while he hasn't had a chance to thoroughly examine the proposal, it seems to be in line with the CPC's agenda.

"It's something we are certainly going to take a hard look at," he said about the cemetery gates.

Another proposal before the board also would fall under historic preservation. A private group led by Robert Thomas and Anne Montague is seeking $135,000 for the restoration of five plots at the Central Cemetery.

Ivimey said various CPC subcommittees will work with the groups to try and iron out their ideas.

"The sub-committees will get each group's proposal more specific and work with them in putting a solid proposal together," Ivimey said. "When the subcommittee is satisfied it'll bring the proposal before the entire board."

The CPC makes recommendations to Town Meeting, which has the final say on whether community preservation funds should be spent on a particular project.

Good news for historic structures

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

An amendment to the Community Preservation Act (CPA) will allow cities and towns which have adopted the law, including Hingham and Cohasset, to use CPA funds to pay for much-needed improvements to historic town-owned buildings.

That could be good news for the trustees of the G.A.R. (Grand Army of the Republic) Hall on Main Street in Hingham, which is up for a major facelift.

Representative Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, and Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, co-sponsored the amendment.

The Community Preservation Act is a landmark law that encourages Massachusetts towns and cities to provide community housing and preserve and protect historic resources and open spaces in their communities.

"These technical changes will allow communities some flexibility. A prime example is the situation Hingham is dealing with in regards to G.A.R. Hall," said Bradley. "Currently, the town is unable to use any CPA funds to repair this valuable structure. The passage of this amendment corrects this situation."

Cohasset officials have also indicated the amendment will be beneficial to the town as it plans for the future.

"That would be a pleasant surprise," said G.A.R. Trustee Ernest Sofis. "If we could use some of those funds, it would be wonderful, because we would be able to do some inside refurbishing sooner than expected."

Allocation of funds is subject to approval by a town's Community Preservation Committee and Town Meeting.

Before passage of the amendment, historic assets owned by a municipality prior to the local adoption of the CPA were not eligible for funding for "rehabilitation," but only for "maintenance."

The amendment to the law expands the use of CPA funds for the rehabilitation of historic resources to include a municipality's previously acquired properties.

Over the years, G.A.R. Hall, built in 1888, has fallen into disrepair, although emergency work has been performed.

A $35,000 planning grant awarded to the town some time ago by the state Department of Housing and Community Development provided funds to determine the construction requirements for bringing the building into conformance with building codes and legislation related to making the hall handicapped accessible.

A number of improvements and repairs are planned for the building.

The total price tag for an addition and alterations is about $400,000, but additional state grants may be available to cover 75 percent of that amount. The town would need to come up with the remaining funds to complete the project.

"I'm pleased to see that both branches of the legislature acted so quickly to move this important bill amending the CPA through before the end of the session," said Hedlund. "Now cities and towns can execute their rehabilitation plans for historic structures unencumbered by murky regulations."

An overview of CPA changes

An amendment to the state's Community Preservation Act is considered a positive sign in many communities which have adopted the legislation.

Before passage of the amendment, historic assets owned by a municipality prior to the local adoption of the CPA were not eligible for funding for "rehabilitation," but only for "maintenance."

Sections 1 and 2 of the amendment rectify an oversight in the original act. The term "historic structures and landscapes" is defined in the definitional section but is never used in the text of the act. Instead, the term "historic resources" is used in its place. The amendment will make the term "historic resources" consistent throughout the act.

The third section creates a definition for the term "rehabilitation." The CPA does not define the term, which has led to some confusion about exactly what a community can use CPA funds to do. The amendment includes in its definition of rehabilitation the use of funds to comply with building and access codes and federal guidelines for historical structures. This includes leaving intact the design of the exterior of the building and the use of appropriate materials in renovation so the structure retains its original historic nature.

Section 4 specifically changes the language in the act to permit communities to use CPA funds to rehabilitate previously acquired historic resources. The present language states that rehabilitation can only be done to those assets purchased or acquired after communities have adopted the act.

The amendment does not alter this provision for community housing, open spaces, and land for recreational use. Rather, it permits the use of funds for both previously acquired historic resources as well as those purchased pursuant to the act.

Section 5 allows the amendment to apply retroactively to communities which have already held Town Meetings and approved projects. Without this section, towns would have to hold another Town Meeting and re-approve their CPA projects, which could cause unnecessary delays.

Drama Workshop is all about the kids

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Sitting in the Town Hall auditorium it was hard not to recognize the respect the sisters had for the space. Although all the children had left that day's rehearsal, there were still a few staff members that joined the three women in cleaning up the stained floor.

"Just don't make this another article about the three of us starting this program," begged Beth Deveney, founder of the Children's Drama Workshop. "Try and make it about the kids."

"I look forward to it every year."
— Ian Porter, 10

Well, it would be easy to write about the kids who participate in the program. For more than a decade they've been assembling under the sister's direction and putting on such classic plays such as "Alice in Wonderland", "The Lion King", "The Little Mermaid" and revised plays like "Cinderella Smith".

This year, the cast of 80 is embarking on a musical version of an animated film called "Monsters, Inc."

The script includes many dance numbers and music by Michael Jackson, Frank and Nancy Sinatra, the Back Street Boys, Aretha Franklin, Kylie Minogue, Smash Mouth and others.

The play invites the audience into the world behind a child's closet door, a place called Monstropolis where monsters merrily live and work fearing only one thing, human children.

"It's a really fun play," said Ian Porter, a student at the Deer Hill School. "I like working with them (the sisters) because they make me feel real comfortable on stage."

Ian, who plays the villain in the play and is in his fifth year with the workshop, said he loves returning each summer to see his friends.

"I have a ton of friends that I get to see every year during the plays," said the 10-year-old. "I look forward to it every year."

Sam Game, a nine-year-old and student at Deer Hill school, plays Mike, who is the assistant to the main monster in the play.

"It's great coming to the rehearsals," said Sam, who is his fourth year participating with the workshop. "They make it fun with all of the singing and dancing."

Beth, 26, started the program when she was 14 after performing skits and shows on her parents' driveway in their home on Pleasant Street. She pitched the idea to recreation commission director Jack Worley.

"I was in a play and loved it, I thought it was so incredible," she said. "I wanted others to have the same experience."

Worley said the drama workshop has evolved and is now one of the most popular programs it offers.

"It's great for Cohasset kids to have the opportunity to participate in a production of this magnitude," he said. "It's a fantastic program and a credit to the three of them that it's become so popular."

Beth, along with her sisters Grace, 24, and Sara, 28, said the cornerstone of the program is the children. She said theatre creates the same kind of camaraderie that sports does.

"When the kids are part of the cast it makes them feel like they belong somewhere," Beth said. "It's wonderful to watch different aged kids become friends when in another environment, they may not speak to each other."

Grace, who works with the leads of the plays on their acting skills, said she gets the most satisfaction from watching children grow in the workshop.

"You watch them year after year and you see them go from being really shy to being so confident on the stage," she said. "All of the sudden they get on stage and everything clicks, it's great."

Performance of "Monsters, Inc." will take place at the Town Hall on Tuesday, July 30 at 10 a.m. and then again at 7 p.m., and on Wednesday, July 31 at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Tickets for the show are $10 and may be purchased in advance at Cohasset Town Hall. The tickets can be bought on Monday from 3-4:30 p.m., Tuesday from 3- 7 p.m., Wednesday and Thursday from 3-4:30 p.m. and on Friday from 9 a.m. till 1 p.m.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Welcome to the neighborhood

We told friends last week about fisher cat sightings in Hingham and they looked at us as if we were crazy. No one had ever heard of the animal.

As it turns out fishers (also known as fisher cats) aren't cats at all and are nothing new. The elusive animals are part of the weasel family and have been around for centuries, but not here.

Along with wild turkeys and coyotes, fishers are making a comeback in the area and likely will become more common. They and their fellow critters, which are benefiting from recent mild winters, are finding suburbia to their liking.

It may be true that increasing development is driving these animals out of the woods and into our neighborhoods and backyards. But it is also true that many animals were hunted to near extinction in past centuries. Woods were cleared for farming with the timber used as fuel and for building ships and houses — destroying the habitat for many small- to medium-sized animals. Today much of that habitat has returned.

In our neighborhood, which is on a hill and a mile from the ocean as the crow flies – one could see the water in colonial times, we're told. But that's not the case today due to all the trees and woodlands.

We wrote our first coyote story about 12 years ago. At the time, the closest most New Englanders had ever come to a coyote was in a Hollywood Western. Nowadays, coyotes are a common occurrence.

We have no doubt that fishers will be in the news going forward.

"Fishers are very adaptable to woodland habitat and colonize areas they find suitable," says William Davis, wildlife biologist with MassWildlife.

The internet is full on interesting facts about fishers that are found across the North American continent from Alaska to New England. They do not occur on any other continent.

Fishers are shy of humans but are effective predators and eat small animals. They have been known to eat cats.

According to Wild Things Unlimited in Montana, fishers are known for their ability to kill porcupines and in some forests have been introduced to control the porcupine population. Fisher dens for giving birth are in tree cavities high off the ground. They also live in cavities in rocky areas and hollow logs.

They are most active at sunset and sunrise and can range up to 60 miles to hunt for food.

Males can weigh up to 20 pounds and be up to 40 ins. long, including their tail. Fishers range from dark brown to almost black and have long, luxurious coats. They are also the fastest American animal in trees.

Don't 'improve' Cohasset Harbor

To the Board of Selectmen:

It was strongly urged that I send you a copy of a letter I wrote to Dean Rizzo in answer to a survey he had sent out regarding changes in the harbor area.

The survey's questions were set up in such a way that it was impossible to answer most of it without being forced to tacitly agree with the unnecessary changes being put forth in it. This is a subject many of us feel very strongly about. The changes are not necessary. They are essentially in the interest of one person. They would constitute a major disruption, again, so soon after the last one. They are a waste of money.

Please take our deep concerns on this issue seriously.

Georgiana M. Massa
51 Border St.,

Dear Mr. Rizzo:

This is in response to the recent survey you sent regarding The Harbor Area. I couldn't answer the survey because I don't agree with the questions: I don't think changing the harbor area is an "Improvement," and there have been no "public safety issues" to address in the history of the harbor that I'm aware of - i.e. no one has been injured in my lifetime at least. However, there may be safety issues if the changes are implemented, such as diminished quick access to the harbor in the event that the higher fencing attracts a child to climb it and fall into the water.

I know you know my views on this subject having spoken to you at length - but I'll just try to put down some concerns that I and other townspeople have regarding what we feel is an unnecessary expense, mainly cosmetic, and more than that, a degrading of the uniqueness of Cohasset.

• First of all, the harbor area doesn't resemble the photographs; which I believe is unfair to the people not familiar with it.

• The "waterfront properties" which were mentioned as being "public" and needing "linkage" are essentially owned by one person and I don't believe it would be fair to expect all the taxpayers in the town to pay for it. also, all the areas of the harbor have been effectively linked for the past 300 plus years or so. I don't know of anyone who cannot get safely and efficiently from Government Island to Margin Street, for instance.

• Placing curbs around the harbor streets would make what flows now, transmogrify into the rigid, squared-off look of a Quincy, Braintree or some other suburb. Cohasset doesn't fall into that category. We're technically an exurb.

• I'm absolutely adamant on no road-widening. It's a documented fact that a widened road attracts speeding. (That would create a safety issue). I have personally witnessed a number of near accidents at the bottom of my driveway (51 Border St.) as cars going to and from the restaurant turn around in my driveway on a regular basis. It is already too steep an incline and would be made virtually impassable if it were shortened by even the smallest amount.

• If you feel there is a need for more walking space, I would suggest eliminating parking on Border Street all together; there's town parking at Government Island, and simply refurbish the sidewalk as is done all over Town.

• In sum, the standardized changes that the architect is suggesting might be valid in a situation like Weymouth Port, where the harbor area is not as natural as Cohasset's. Cohasset has the uniqueness of a quaint New England fishing village. The suggested changes would make it like many other places - uniform, boring - sort of like virtual reality. Instead of our beautiful, accessible, natural Harbor - it would tend to go the way of a theme park, a little Disneyworldish; like a diorama, untouchable - "Cohasset-Under-Glass," if you will. It would make the town appear sterile and somewhat like a computer model rather than what's left of the natural look of a working harbor, which it is first of all. The fishermen's concerns should be taken into consideration very seriously.

• There is a serious noise level issue in the summer and the changes would serve to attract more kids as a place to hang-out drinking and drugging with their boom boxes at ever elevating decibel levels at later and later hours.

• There's a vandalism issue as well. For one example, my mailbox has been repeatedly hacked off and stolen (six or seven times) to the end that I have had to stop replacing it, and now have to rely solely on a post office box.

• Re: The Hingham Harbor Photographs. This is just what I mean! It looks like their harbor is behind bars. We desperately don't want to see Cohasset harbor basically "Jailed." We've always had a feeling of being connected to it, and the changes would serve to disconnect us from it, put sort of an unnatural barrier between us and the Harbor.

• To close, I would suggest that, our taxes having been almost doubled in a scant 10 years or so, any further drain on our pocketbooks should be something virtually necessary We have also been repeatedly disrupted during the past five years or less with the dirt and dust of seemingly endless digging up of streets and detours throughout the Town. The last thing we need is another majr disruption. What may look harmless on paer never turns out that way as the project gets underway, is inevitably stalled for a variety of reasons, and then come the demands for more money to finish. It happens every time and this is no different.

But much more importantly, let's not change the natural accessible beauty of an unusual harbor by boxing it in.

Keno at DiNero's

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to an article published in your June 27, 2002, edition titled "Church says no to Keno" in the "Week in Cohasset" column. As a resident of Cohasset and a longtime employee of Frank Plotner, proprietor of DiNero's, I would like to state my objections to the Rev. Maheras' concerns regarding the request for a license to have Keno in our restaurant.

Rev. Maheras' main concern is that the implementation of a Keno machine would have a negative effect on traffic and parking in this area, he feels this would interfere with the church's future plan to erect a community center. I am not sure how the reverend has arrived at this conclusion, he states that the future community center would be a focal point for the elderly and families.

As a member of this town I think any addition to our area that supports families and the elderly is a wonderful idea. At the same time, I have been fortunate enough to witness many wonderful family celebrations at DiNero's. People come to our establishment for many reasons, a birthday, an anniversary, a christening or just a night out. We have many regulars, of all ages, from far and wide, and welcome them all in a professional, courteous manner.

DiNero's is a far cry from a bar room, it is so much more than that. The area designated for the Keno game would be inside the bar area, not in the main dining room. It would be an added form of entertainment to our already well-established following.

Although the traffic in West Corner continues to be a growing burden on our small seaside community, DiNero's is in no way solely responsible for this. Mr. Plotner has worked very hard at planning parking options so as not to impose on our neighbors. At a recent informal abutters' meeting, which we hosted in the restaurant, our neighbors were invited to view his future expansion plans and voice their concerns. Mr. Plotner is in the process of implementing some of these options in hopes of satisfying the concerns raised by the surrounding residents.

In addition, I would like to note that each town receives a percentage of the Massachusetts Lottery Commission's proceeds. Each town has a different percentage and the money is used by the discretion of the town or city councilors. The town of Cohasset received 22 percent of the proceeds from lottery sales in the fiscal year 2001. The amount totaled $427,650, although I was unable to determine what percentage of that came directly from the one existing Keno machine in town, every little bit helps. I am sure the Selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad put this money to great use, imagine what another 22 percent of proceeds from a new Keno machine could mean for our town.

Finally, I would like to note the comparison of Keno to the game Bingo. Is Bingo not sanctioned by many religious institutions as a means to support their financial needs? The inherent dangers of gambling are no different than any other addiction, which ultimately lie in the hands of the individual. Since Keno was introduced by the Massachusetts Lottery Commission Sept. 30, 1993, I have yet to see a front page article depicting the detriment of this game.

Scholarship fund welcomes donations

TO THE EDITOR:

Members of the Osgood Community have established The Barbara McCabe Scholarship Fund to honor a remarkable and dedicated teacher who died suddenly last June. We grieve her loss to the educational community and have established this fund in her honor. We will be presenting a scholarship each year to a Cohasset student to fund an innovative program that would normally be outside the traditional scope of school programs. We believe this is the most appropriate way to honor her memory.

We had a successful sports memorabilia raffle which kicked off our fund-raising events. We were fortunate to have items donated by Reebok. Our thanks to Mary Sease and the Farmers' Market for graciously allowing us space and support for our raffle, which was most successful. Thank you to all who participated. We also wish to thank Mary Whitley and her parents' committee who manned and baked four our bake sale and memorial tea.

Contributions to The Barbara McCabe Scholarship Fund are actively being sought and are gratefully appreciated. Checks may be sent to the Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, 48 South Main St., Cohasset 02025.

HEALTH NOTES

Call for help: Young blood needed now!

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As chairman of the Board of Health, I am urging you to help in a critical public health issue: Ensuring the future of the nation's blood supply. Somewhere in the United States, blood is needed every two seconds. It's vital that the next time blood is needed by someone in our community, it will be available.

Blood is a resource that is unfortunately taken for granted by many. Because of apathy and a number of other factors, such as increasingly stringent donor eligibility criteria, there is a critical shortage of our available blood supply. In Cohasset the three Red Cross blood drives, generally in June, September and January collect about 300 pints from about 360 potential volunteer donors. Nationally, about 5 percent of the eligible American public donates to support 100 percent of the need. Demand is growing, and the current pool of donors is aging. We could do more. Far more people, nearly 60 percent of us, could donate and it's safe for most of us to give blood again in 60 days. Consider donating blood, and encourage our young citizens to donate too!

Nationally, about 5 percent of the eligible American public donates to support 100 percent of the need.

The current blood supply has reached a dangerously low level. Type O negative blood, the universal blood type, is below a two-day supply nationwide. Seven days is desirable for both routine and unusual needs. The summer months are particularly challenging, as this is the time when students, who make up 15 percent of the Red Cross donor pool during the regular year, are in recess and other donors are vacationing. Given the ongoing war on terror and the potential threats to our homeland security, it is increasingly important to ensure a safe and available blood supply for Americans.

Now more than ever, your support is needed. Call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE (1-800-4483-5433) or logon to GiveLife.org to schedule an appointment in the coming weeks to give the gift of life. Then, continue donating by marking a day in honor of someone special to give another gift of life. You can donate every 56 days, as long as you are at least 17 years old, weigh at least 110 pounds and are in good health.

Time to say goodbye and move on....to California

TWENTY SOMETHING

EVAN SCHIFF

Well, this is it. The last column, the last day of work, the last week on the East Coast. I'm heading out West, following the lure of the unknown and in the process, leaving the known.

It's a bittersweet feeling that I'm guessing is part of the aging process. One door creaks open and another slams forcefully shut.

Yes, I'm looking forward to new experiences and meeting throngs of exciting people with varying opinions on eclectic subjects, but I'm also leaving my friends, family and comfortable and familiar lifestyle behind.

And while a fresh path lies ahead, it still hasn't quite sunk in that once I leave to drive cross-country, I won't be coming back. This isn't just an annual summer vacation, this is permanent.

When I tell people I'm taking off for San Diego they often get a wistful glimmer in their eyes and say something to the effect of, "wow, what a beautiful place, I'm so jealous." I usually nod my head and reply that yes, I'm thrilled to be going to such an enviable destination.

There's just so much to look forward to. There's new people to meet, new experiences to have and future jobs to conquer. There are different places to visit, exotic culinary fare to feast on and a new ocean to cool off in. There's a new rhythm of life to become accustomed to, a new grid of streets to get lost in and a new apartment to furnish. It's all very thrilling and intimidating.

I know life "must go on" but it's particularly tough to leave certain things behind that will go on without me. Like my 17-year-old sister Emily, who has grown into a wonderful person, is busy applying to colleges and my 13-year-old sister Laurie, who has surpassed her older brother as the family comedian, is just starting to become her own person.

Friends, whose influences have molded, shaped and then refined me, will become stories and pictures. Fenway Park will become legend rather than the ballpark down the street and the biting cold of winter will be forgotten like a pair of gloves.

Late night sessions with friends when we had nothing more to entertain us than our minds will be replaced with the standard "so, where you from?" It's not easy to find confidants whom you trust so completely, that you listen and take to heart what they say.

While I've been out of college for a year only now does this feel that I have closed that period of my life. I have been working since I graduated but have lived relatively the same lifestyle with the same people. But not anymore.

So, there's only one thing left to do. Anna, Lauren, Kyla, Frank, JP, Mike, Tyler, Wartski, Lise, Seth, Bret, Sam, Mom, Dad, Judy, Pete, NanNan, PopPop, MomMom, there you go. You finally got your name in the Cohasset Mariner. Hopefully, now you too can move on.

Citizen board to advise Massport is on the table

YOUR REP

GARRETT BRADLEY

I would like to take this opportunity to update you on certain developments regarding Massport and the proposed additional runway at Logan Airport, to which I am opposed.

The House of Representatives recently passed a Transportation Bond Bill and included in it was language calling for the creation of a Citizens Advisory Board to Massport. Local governments of cities and towns that are impacted by Massport will appoint representatives to the Advisory Board.

These representatives will review all fiscal decisions at Massport and make reports on operations to the Authority itself, to the Governor and to the public. Beyond being a watchdog on fiscal issues, the Advisory Board will also have the power to appoint one member to the Massport Board of Directors.

Allowing the Advisory Board to appoint a member will mean that our communities will have a vote on the Massport Board. The Massport Advisory Board will operate similar to the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) Advisory Board which has worked not only to keep the MWRA informed of local concerns, but has ultimately also helped the MWRA maintain its bottom line and reduce annual rate increases.

I was successful at including Hingham, Hull and Cohasset on this Advisory Board. Each community will be able to appoint a member who will have equal voting privileges. The bill now moves to the Senate for consideration.

Each community will be able to appoint a member who will have equal voting privileges.

As I am sure you are aware, the FAA issued its environmental impact statement several weeks ago. It allows for the construction of Runway 14/32 with certain conditions. The "compromise", as the FAA calls it, would limit the runway's use to days when winds from the northeast cause delays on other Logan runways. There is no guarantee that the runway will be limited to these conditions, especially since it is Massport and the FAA who will decide when the runway should be used. My feeling is, "if you build it they will come."

That is why the creation of the Citizens Advisory Board is critical. One of my major concerns with the FAA's recent approval of the runway with certain usage conditions, is the fact that Massport, if the project proceeds over my and others objections, will be its own enforcement agent of the appropriate usage. This is unacceptable.

The FAA is accepting Public Comments on the Environmental Impact Statement. Copies of this may be obtained through Massport or the C.A.R.E. (Citizens Against Runway Expansion) web site, www.stop1432.com.

Comments may be sent to John C. Silva, manager of the Federal Aviation Administration Environmental Projects, Airport Division, ANR-600, New England Region, 12 New England Executive Park, Burlington, MA 01803. I would also be happy to forward your comments along if you would like to send them to my office, State House, Room 472, Boston, MA 02133.

It is critical that the FAA hears from all of us on how this project will impact our lives on a daily basis. I am continuing to fight this proposal and will work with other elected officials both at the state and federal level. As always, I welcome your input on this or any issue. Thank you.

Garrett Bradley is state representative for the Third Plymouth District of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Swan with an attitude

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I knew this was going to happen as soon as Massasoit taught us to garnish our turkeys with cranberry sauce and invite them over to be the main course at Thanksgiving dinner.

I knew that, sooner or later, the birds were going to strike back.

A year ago it was a belligerent wild turkey named George who halted the delivery of mail to some 30 houses in Newtonville by pecking, screeching and beating his wings at postman Tim Hoban.

Now it's an angry swan that has been attacking boaters on the Eel River in Plymouth, a swan that has already sunk one canoe, dumping a man and his 12-year-old son into about three feet of water.

Looks like a job for Tom Ridge and the boys from the Department of Homeland Security because if that bird isn't a terrorist I'll eat my autographed picture of Osama bin Vulture.

But, failing federal intervention, Plymouth selectmen scheduled a meeting this week (Tuesday, July 23) to decide what to do about the swan before he turns the town into a sequel for Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds."

Picture Tippy Hedren trapped in a Court Street phone booth, being pecked at by swans, turkeys, gulls and piping plovers — although the Tippy Hedren of 2002 probably would be carrying a cell phone.

The natural reaction of the town fathers would be to dispatch the swan with a fowling piece, stuff it with sage dressing and serve it to the guests at the Plymouth County House of Correction.

But they have to be careful since the bird, in effect, has hired itself a lawyer, one David Abbott, "to make sure whatever was done with the swan was done with due process."

Let's give it a fair trial before we roast it in brown gravy.

One suggestion for taming the cranky swan without resorting to violence is to squirt it in the face with grape Kool-Aid, not orange, not lemon, not raspberry, but grape, which is like castor oil to a swan.

Another suggestion involves something called "aversion conditioning," which sounds like the anti-swan crowd has been conferring with Sigmund Freud about the bird's libido.

It means when the swan attacks, do something unpleasant to it, like confining it to an oven at 350 degrees for several hours, an action which is guaranteed to free the Eel River for canoe traffic for years to come.

George, the turkey that kept the postman from the swift completion of his appointed rounds in Newton, was a one-day sensation but the swan, who is nameless, shows signs of possessing considerable staying power.

Already the Wall Street Journal has taken notice of him — on page one, no less — and there's a rumor that the Fox News Channel is sending a team to make sure that coverage of the swan's fate is fair and balanced.

And, if all else fails, I'm willing to invite him over to the house for dinner.

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Ivory-billed Woodpecker

Last April I reported on the search for the Ivory-billed Woodpecker thought to be extinct by most people. Some tantalizing reports in recent years had raised hopes that perhaps there might be a few birds left. Last February a remarkable cooperative expedition in the Pearl River area of Louisiana was jointly sponsored by the Zeiss Sports Optics Company, Cornell Lab of Ornithology and the Louisiana Department of Wildlife & Fisheries. The research team heard some promising sounds, but saw no birds. Meanwhile scientists and the rest of the birding world have been waiting for the analysis of 4,000 hours of digital recordings by 12 acoustic recording units set up by the Cornell Lab. With this sophisticated equipment, they were able to conclude that the tapping sounds that excited the researchers in the area "were distant gun shots, with reverberations that sounded to human ears like drumming on a hollow snag."

Plans are under discussion for future expeditions, perhaps in other areas.

Piping Plover

The Piping Plover is a small shorebird. Its sandy coloration provides almost total camouflage. It is listed as "threatened" both federally and in the state of Massachusetts. It breeds on Atlantic coastal beaches from Newfoundland to North Carolina and winters from North Carolina to Florida, with a few birds going as far south as the Bahamas. As with many birds, their population decline was precipitated by the millinery trade. Since then, recreational use of beaches and waterfront development are largely responsible for further declines in populations. Because these birds nest right on the sand, they are vulnerable to foot and vehicular traffic, dogs, and predation by crows, skunks, foxes, and gulls. In the year 2000 storms flooded 178 nests, out of almost 500, in Massachusetts alone.

To help protect these plovers, a number of groups and agencies put up protective wire cages called "wire protective exclosures", erect signs designed to educate the public, and ban dogs and beach buggies. This last has been the source of bitter disputes and conflicts.

The New England population stayed about the same between 1997 and 2000 then increased 3 percent to 641 pairs, according to the US Fish & Wildlife Service. The population of Piping Plovers in Massachusetts began to increase in the early 90s, but has been fairly stable since 1998 with 495 pairs in 2001. Out of almost 500 nesting pairs in 2001, people monitored 103 nest sites in Massachusetts, plus 58 more sites with no breeding pairs.

The "Patriot Ledger" reported on July 17 that 12 out of 23 chicks survived on Duxbury Beach in 2002 as opposed to 17 survivors in 2001. If there are declines in too many areas, the status of Piping Plovers may change to "endangered" in the future.

House Sparrows

Who would have thought it? The House Sparrow, affectionately dubbed "cockney sparrer" by Londoners, is becoming an endangered species in their city. The House Sparrow population in Kensington Gardens has gradually declined from 2603 in 1926 to just 4 in the spring of 2002, according to an AP report on June 18, 2002. Other London landmarks are missing their sparrows as well, while other species in these places seem to be doing fine.

This bird, formerly known as the English Sparrow, was brought to the United States in the 1850s in order to help control insect pests. It only took about 25 years for the population to explode and for the sparrow itself to become labeled a pest. Able to produce up to four broods a year, and to compete very successfully with other species for nesting cavities means it has become somewhat ubiquitous in many areas.

Now the London Biodiversity Partnership is enlisting the help of citizens to count and report any House Sparrows they see. By documenting where they are thriving, perhaps the mystery of the disappearances can be solved. At the same time on this side of the Atlantic, the North American Bluebird Society is putting out information on how to control House Sparrows' aggressive use of bluebird houses for nesting. There are children in London being taught how to build birdhouses to encourage House Sparrows to nest, while people in this country are being taught how to keep them from nesting.

West Nile Virus

The first human case of West Nile virus infection was found in 1937 in a woman from the West Nile District of Uganda. This virus, a type of flavivirus, can cause inflammation of the spinal cord and brain in humans and horses with symptoms that resemble the 'flu. This is serious enough to cause death in some cases. Mosquitoes that bite infected birds spread the virus to humans and horses through bites. The virus cannot be passed from directly human to human. So far there is no known cure, although scientists are working on a vaccine.

After the first human case in 1937, the virus was found in the 1950s in Israel and Egypt. Equine disease was not observed until the 1960s when it was found in Egypt and France. The West Nile virus was first found in the United States in New York in 1999. It has now been confirmed in Africa, the Middle East, Oceania, North America and parts of Asia.

So far this year, 21 states have had birds test positive for West Nile Virus, including Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and New York. According to the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, 136 birds in this state have been tested, 10 of which were positive. The first infected dead crow in Massachusetts was from Wakefield on May 21, about seven weeks earlier than last year. Texas, Kentucky, Florida and Louisiana have had horses with West Nile virus.

Earlier this month the first confirmed human cases of the year were reported from Louisiana. Three men developed the disease, one being in serious condition. In 2001 there were 66 infections in humans in the US with 9 deaths. This was the highest number since its appearance in 1999. Taking precautions against being bitten by mosquitoes is advised.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Palmer on 40B

Nathaniel Palmer, Republican candidate for state representative for the towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and North Scituate, addresses the 40B issue.

"Like many in the area," he said, "I have become increasingly frustrated with the growing number of 40B projects throughout the South Shore, where developers have used the ruse of affordable housing to justify projects out of character and otherwise inappropriate for the communities which bare the burden of them."

Palmer found that while many voters are sympathetic to the issue of affordable housing, however, most were surprised to learn that the Beacon Hill has allowed commercial real estate developers, many from out of state, to override local regulations and community interest.

"When we first began the campaign we found much less awareness or concern over Chapter 40B," Palmer explains. "However with growing visibility for 40B projects such as 'Avalon Bay' in Cohasset and 'Walden Woods' on the Stenbeck property in Scituate, the issue of regaining local control over land development has emerged as a chief concern among local voters."

Palmer is pleased Chapter 40B reform is now getting the level of attention it has recently received in the legislature and in the local community. Palmer is hopeful that the current surge in interest will help bring about reform, something that the majority party on Beacon Hill has succeeded in stopping thus far.

Healey comes to Hingham

Candidate for Lieutenant Governor endorsed by Mitt Romney, Kerry Healey will be honored by South Shore GOP leaders and voters Sunday, July 28, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club, 274 South St., Hingham.

The brunch is open to the public but reservations are required.

You can RSVP to Michelle McCarthy 617-491-9110, ext. 249

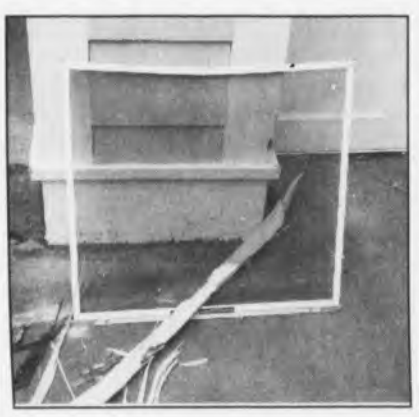
Healey was chair of State GOP Party; teacher of public policy and criminal justice at UMASS Lowell, Endicott College; appointed by Gov. Cellucci to MA criminal history systems board; 10 years experience developing criminal justice policy for U.S. Dept. Justice with policy consulting firm.

Healey is graduate of Harvard College, Ph.D. from Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland, in law and political science.

Healey lives in Beverly with her husband of 16 years and two school aged children.

Lightning bolt

Lightning struck at about 6 a.m., July 19 and hit a tree at the Simonds home, 370 North Main St. It struck the tree, shown here, and sent pieces of bark flying into all adjoining yards. One piece flew through a bedroom screen and smashed the glass frame. It was a simultaneous bang and the breaking of glass, Paul Simonds said. "I lost a fax machine and one phone," he said.



Passing the buck to Swift

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL P. NORTON

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending July 19, 2002.

Democracy, or oligarchy? It's getting tougher to tell.

State government in Massachusetts is set up with a system of checks and balances designed to make sure the citizenry is well represented, but critics these days have more and more reasons to be skeptical.

All last week, a handful of leading legislators met privately to draft a budget bill that will be wildly different from the ones the full House and Senate voted on during May and June. Because leaders have run out the clock on formal sessions for the year, nearly 200 lawmakers will have just a few hours to flip through the budget before they're forced to take an up or down vote. Few will fully comprehend the bill.

And because that small group of legislators could not agree on a balanced budget, they plan to leave critical decisions about state programs and services to an even smaller group of one: Acting Gov. Jane Swift. Democrats outgun the Republican governor and the pundits are fond of saying how powerless and irrelevant she's been. But key decisions, however unpopular, are now being left to Swift to make alone.

Another power play was pulled on Wednesday (July 17). The Legislature voted 137-53 to adjourn its Constitutional Convention for the year rather than debate and vote on a controversial measure put before them by a campaign that had gathered more than 130,000 voter signatures. Senate President Thomas Birmingham, who orchestrated the proceedings, said it was better to kill a measure defining marriage as between a man and a woman by adjourning than risk taking it up and having it pass, which would have moved the measure one step closer to a ballot vote two years from now.

The proposal's opponents say it would prevent gay and lesbian couples from attaining rights associated with marriage. A Boston Herald poll showed most voters oppose the question. But with the campaign within striking distance of attaining the 25 percent threshold of support needed to keep the question alive, Birmingham derailed the ballot drive with a carefully calculated procedural vote.

All of the actions underscore a reality that Beacon Hill regulars know well — most key decisions in state government are made by a few and signed off on by the rank-and-file in the Legislature. There's very little dissent and even less debate. And there's another trend: overturning the will of the voters.

This Legislature is clearly willing to accept the risks of doing the opposite of what the voters say they want.

After starving a voter-approved public campaign financing law to death by not providing financing, the Legislature is poised to adopt a budget that blocks further implementation of two other voter initiatives that reduce the income tax and make charitable contributions tax deductible.

This Legislature is clearly willing to accept the risks of doing the opposite of what the voters say they want. With Clean Elections, lawmakers say the voters didn't know what they were approving and don't really support it. And legislators say the tax cuts are less important than preserving government services.

In a nutshell, this Legislature is comfortable substituting its judgment for that of the voters. Some would argue that makes them a profile in courage. Others say it's grounds for tossing them out of office.

But many incumbents have little to fear — a recent study showed the bulk of lawmakers face no serious challengers. The treatment of Clean Elections has kept some from running. But the larger question is whether residents of Massachusetts are getting the most out of their Legislature when many lawmakers are marginal players.

There's a prevailing ethos on Beacon Hill these days that can be summed up as don't know-won't tell. Many lawmakers simply don't know what's happening at higher levels with major policy issues. Others know, but won't discuss it publicly often because they fear some type of legislative retribution or just don't want to rock the leadership boat. Legislators are often willing to talk, as long as it's off the record.

- The concentration on the budget almost overshadowed passage of one of the largest tax increases in state history. To help bail the state out of its fiscal troubles in fiscal 2003 and beyond, House and Senate negotiators agreed that the income tax will be frozen at 5.3 percent to raise $215 million, personal exemptions will be lowered to generate $240 million, most capital gains will be taxed at 5.3 percent to raise $275 million, and 75 cents will be added to the price of a pack of cigarettes to produce $220 million. The capital gains hike will be retroactive to May 1. In an outside section, the tax bill also authorizes state health officials to pass rules prohibiting the sale or shipment of tobacco products to minors.
- Meeting in Idado, the nation's governors united in opposition to a lawsuit with implications for one of the fastest growing spending items in any state budget: prescription drug costs. The governors are supporting a decision by the federal government to approve Michigan's plan to create a preferred drug list as a way of managing Medicaid costs. In its lawsuit, the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America assert the feds overstepped their bounds. Governors say drugs costs are rising 15-20 percent a year.
- Massachusetts was one of only four states to get an "A" or "B" when the Washington-based Ballot Initiative Strategy Center Foundation released a report July 17 evaluating online disclosure of financial contributors to ballot campaigns. The report's authors said too much time passes between the time donations are made and the time they're posted online here, but gave Massachusetts a "B" and said the state Office of Campaign and Political Finance has a "solid" disclosure program. Many disclosure requirements were mandated under the voter-approved public campaign financing law of 1998.
- State Auditor Joseph DeNucci reported Monday, July 15 the state pension board, under Treasurer Shannon O'Brien's leadership, has not aggressively sought to recover Enron stock losses, inappropriately raised its executive director's salary, and failed to give public notice of meetings. O'Brien's deputies disputed all of the findings and asserted that the audit was politically motivated to settle an old score. O'Brien on Friday met privately with investment world bigwigs to explore pension fund options in an age of scandalous accounting practices at some of the nation's largest corporations.

Cohasset residents lend a helping hand

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It's not a sight most Cohasset residents are used to seeing. Boarded-up homes, dilapidated cars piled onto lawns and even some dwellings that don't have bathrooms are not common here on the South Shore..

"I've never seen anything quite like it," said Becca Lehr, who was a first-time participant in this year's Appalachia Service Project, an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset residents.

This year almost 180 local residents head down to Kentucky and Tennessee to try and make a difference.

"You come home from the trip exhausted but it's a great feeling."
— Phil Lehr

"Sometimes, living up here, you can get stuck in a Cohasset mindset where you think you can just buy anything you want," said Becca, who's a sophomore at Notre Dame Academy. "But that's not how it really is and this trip opens your eyes to that."

The Cohasset program is in its 15th year and has grown every year. The Rev. Gary Ritts, who is the minister at the Second Congregational Church, started the program when he and his wife, Judy, took seven kids to Presque Isle, Maine to work with two Native American families. Now the group charters five buses and 26 vans, which transport the participants to a variety of locations.

"It's very rewarding to go with the kids and see them experience a different culture," said Selectman Merle Brown who was participating with the program for his fifth year. "It's just a fantastic program."

Phil Lehr, who along with Becca, his son Rob and father Arthur went down to Kentucky, said there's a lot of responsibility associated with working on these homes.

"It's hard work," said Lehr who was going on the trip for the ninth year in a row. "You come home from the trip exhausted but it's a great feeling."

The Rev. Gary Ritts calls the group together in front of a Kentucky church.

During the week the participants are in Appalachia, they start working at 9 a.m. and don't stop till 5 p.m. They sleep on air mattresses in the closest school to their work site.

"There's such a spirit of camaraderie when you're working and living with the same people for a week," said Margot Cheel who was going on the trip for the seventh time. "It's kind of magical, the can-do attitude that exists down there."

Cheel, who continues to go on the program even though her children have since moved away from town, said it's opportunity for adults and children to connect without all the stresses of home.

"A lot of us our giving up our vacation time to come down here and work," she said. "But I wouldn't trade it for anything, it's just a great time."

The Appalachia Service Project, a non-profit organization founded in 1969, is a home repair and home building ministry serving central Appalachia. ASP attracts thousands of volunteers across the country every year.

"By putting aside selfish needs and desires, ASP volunteers free themselves to share talent, love, and concern with the people of Appalachia," the ASP brochure states. "More important than construction know-how is a willingness to enter the communities and homes of central Appalachia with sensitivity and accepting people just the way they are."

Volunteers needed at the CEA

During the summer months, some of the people who give the Cohasset Elder Affair's (CEA) programs such good support throughout the year are not as available during the summer months. The CEA would greatly appreciate hearing from anyone who is interested in joining the volunteer list.

Drivers are needed! Volunteer applications are still being accepted for the summer months to help with the local driving program. Drivers are needed in one-to-three-hour shifts, once a month, mornings or afternoons.

If you enjoy working with people and are interested in helping the seniors in your community, this is the opportunity for you. Trips involve picking up seniors and taking them to local stores, shops, post office, town hall or library, and then returning them to their homes. This could be a great way for college students to do community work, or a person on vacation who might have a few hours to spare.

Others help in serving the lunch on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. CEA's greatest need is for Tuesday and Wednesday. Volunteers can set-up, dish-up the plates, serve on trays, or clean up. If you can help or might be interested, please drop in and see how the CEA handles the luncheons.

Receptionists in the office are all volunteers. If interested in occasionally filling-in for someone on vacation or having a day off, please let CEA know. Several people work with the Outreach Worker, Carol Barrett to serve as respite workers or friendly visitors. Whichever opportunity you accept, you will make a great contribution to others' lives and will work in the company of others who are equally dedicated.

Please call 781-383-9112.

Selectmen want inn to be a good neighbor

Board holds off on license change

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Red Lion Inn representatives want people to be able to dine in a patio area, however, the selectmen weren't sure that was the best idea.

To that end, selectmen continued the public hearing last week on whether to allow the inn to change its liquor license to include patio dining in the summer months. The inn also requested the addition of four tables in a vacant room in the main lobby which now serves as a coat room to alleviate congestion in the bar area.

However, selectmen were less concerned with the change in the license than with persisting complaints by a neighbor about the noise, lighting and other annoyances that the couple claims the inn creates.

The board took special notice to the fact the Red Lion has continued to advertise its function hall for 400 people, as evidenced on page 120 of the 2002 Cohasset phone book, when the actual capacity is only 320.

"To hear you've placed another advertisement saying your capacity is 400 is deceiving," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan. "It's a disrespect to the regulations that have been set and is disrespectful to the town."

The Red Lion with its inn, restaurant, Lilac House, bar and barn, is a thriving establishment that attracts innumerable weddings and other functions.

While the contributions of the inn to the town are undeniable, Sullivan said he didn't feel it was appropriate to let the inn pursue a change in its license while these other issues where still unresolved.

"We're willing to do just about anything to be a good neighbor."
— Michael Hayes, Red Lion Inn spokesman

Abutter Rena Karp said while some effort to reduce the impact of the complex has been made, much more needed to be done. She said the inn promised to provide a wall of trees as a sound barrier as well as a promise to try and control the noise that is created when a large function leaves late at night. She said the constant cacophony of car alarms and doors slamming keeps her family awake.

"I'm against any further expansion," she said. "I think the complex is big enough as it is there is no reason for there to be any more areas to drink. There's already more than enough people there."

Michael Hayes, speaking the Red Lion Inn, said the inn is willing to work with the town to solve any concerns the selectmen or abutters may have. The inn has hired a security company to patrol the parking lot after functions and also has a detail officer on hand for the large parties.

"We want to show people we are not creating problems in the community," he said. "If we are, we'll do something about it. We're willing to do just about anything to be a good neighbor."

Sullivan said he's heard that from the Red Lion before and it's time something was done about the complaints.

"We need to make sure they're not breaking any of the regulations that have been set for them," he said. "Until they provide more evidence that they're complying with the rules, I'm not in favor of granting any of their requests."

The public hearing was continued until Aug. 6.

Planning Board to meet at Red Lion

Hopes to address neighbor's concerns

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Michael and Rena Karp, 91 South Main St., have repeatedly come before various board in the town, including the selectmen and Planning Board, in an attempt to have the Red Lion address their concerns.

The Karps have long felt no one is holding the inn's "feet to the fire," so to speak, to make the establishment live up to conditions spelled out by the Zoning Board of Appeals, which issued a special permit for the project.

But on Aug. 7, the Planning Board will holds its meeting at the inn in an effort to more clearly define the problems.

The Karps' complaints concern both noise and lighting. For example, there is a large construction-style light on a tree, which shines into their house.

The couple has claimed that there aren't enough trees screening the inn and say car lights and the reflection of the sun off of vehicles continually disrupts their home.

Aug. 7, the Planning Board will holds its meeting at the inn.

A Feb. 7, 2000 Zoning Board decision spelled out five conditions of the special permit including lighting in the on-site parking area should be kept to the minimum height and intensity, and installation of a six-foot fence and non-deciduous shrubbery to shield residential abutters from headlight glare. The decision also talks about the noise of patrons leaving late at night as a concern, setting a midnight curfew entertainment and music.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said he's not sure how much his board can accomplish.

"They have every right to be concerned with the noise and some of the other issues and we'll do what we can do help them out," Moore said. "But they have to realize that they live on the edge of a business zone and there are always going to be certain issues associated with that."

At last week's Planning Board meeting the Karps were in yet again, this time they focused on structures on the Red Lion's roof that were creating noise.

"It's hard for us to sleep at night," Michael said. "It's just intrusive."

Her work in progress

Peraino at center of three CHS athletic rebuilding projects

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Heather Peraino should be very busy her senior year.

Peraino will captain three different teams in the 2002-2003 school year, all of which are in the re-building processes. During the past few years, she has done a terrific job improving in all her athletic activities, and she plans to graduate with a bang.

This fall, Peraino will attempt to lead the field hockey team back to the championship status it had two years ago, when 11 seniors led the team to a 14-1-1 record. Peraino was a sophomore on that team, the only non-senior who started. Now, Peraino is one of 12 seniors who look locked and loaded for return trip to the state tournament after the Lady Skippers were a mere tie away from a playoff berth last year.

In the winter, Peraino will try to recover from last year's finger injury and return to her spot on the ladies' basketball team as a fearsome shooter and playmaker. When Peraino was a frosh, there was no varsity team, but a core of four freshmen led the JV to a 10-8 record. As a sophomore, Peraino was part of a team that went 1-17. This past winter, the team improved to a much more respectable 6-12 record, with many more close losses. Starting in November, Peraino and pals will be eyeing a minimum of 10 wins, eagerly playing for a potential playoff position.

The coming spring will likely bring the most challenging of the three Peraino projects. Although softball had not existed in Cohasset for four years, the athletic department brought it back in 2002 at the junior varsity level in hopes of re-

Cohasset's Will Harper turns it on down the stretch in butterfly at this past Friday's big win for the Cohasset Swim Team over MASK.

Swim team's wave crests

There's no MASKing Cohasset swimmers glee after this win

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Friday, the Cohasset Swim Team went to 4-0, this time beating the odds to knock off powerhouse MASK (Marshfield Area Swim Klub). With three meets remaining in the season before the league championships, the Cohasset swimmers continue to eye a first place finish in the South Shore Swim League.

The afternoon was slated to be the competition of the season. The pre-meet early morning thunderstorm seemed an appropriate beginning to the day and the arrival of MASK's large, impressive squad – the distinctive yellow caps and black suits – was certainly intimidating. Meets in the past have been close fought affairs, with scorers checking and re-checking the final tally until a two or three point victory is declared. It could go either way.

As it turned out this year, however, the home team had little to worry about. Cohasset took the lead from the first event and held the early margin through the individual races before finally pushing ahead to a comfortable win in the final free relays. The day finished with Cohasset scoring 366 points to MASK's 255.

In the hundred yard medley we have come to expect a head start from the team's youngest swimmers and, true to form, the eight and under boys brought home the first win of the day (1st: Salerno; McCarthy, M.; Mahoney;

Benefit tourney a smash

Nearly $16,000 raised for Children's Hospital

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Annual Children's Hospital Tennis Benefit tournament, held last weekend across Cohasset, was, in tennis terms, a smash.

Nearly 100 doubles players, mostly residents of Cohasset but a few from beyond, had the rare opportunity to use some of the nicest private courts on the South Shore, play competitive and exciting tennis, and just have fun. And it was all for a great cause.

"It is a lot of work," said Darilynn Evans, a head coordinator of the tournament for three years now. "But the feeling we get at the end makes is just great."

Evans and the committee of Sue Sookiasian, Lorraine Tarpey, Carole Meers, Sandy Crough, Barbara O'Neill, Karen Mack and Tracey Thomas met at least once a week for three months to plan the particulars of the tournament. Luckily, finding courts was never a concern, as 18 families graciously donated the use of their gorgeous facilities.

"All the court owners are just wonderful," said Evans, who noted that 17 of the 18 courts were also used last year. "That has never been a problem."

The tournament, which has been held for 13 straight years in Cohasset, amassed nearly $16,000 for the Children's Hospital. On top of the cover charge to enter the tourney, the coordinator's of the weekend held a tremendously successful silent auction as they raised almost $5,000 more than in 2001. The committee also accepted a great deal of contributions from outside donors who could not participate in the tournament.

In the tournament, there were three different mini-brackets of 16 teams apiece. The "A-level" was for highly competitive players, the "C-level" for those who play more for enjoyment than competition, and the "B-level" for everyone in between.

Last year there was a "Super-A" draw for Club pros, but many of last

Getting on her horse

Cohasset's Larson to compete at national horse shows

Emily Larson of Cohasset has been selected as one of only nine young riders from New England to compete at the Young Riders National Championship outside of Chicago from Aug. 5 through Aug. 12 and the National Junior Hunter Championship in Lexington, Kentucky, Aug. 13 through Aug. 15.

Larson has been riding since age 5 and competes on a regular basis throughout New England. She was recently the Reserve Champion in the Junior Hunter Division at the Saratoga, N.Y. Horse Show and the Reserve Champion in the Junior Hunter Division at the Atlanta Classic Horse Show held at the site of the 1996 Summer Olympics. Last week she placed first and won the Blue Ribbon in the Junior Hunter Class at the Vermont Summer Festival in Manchester, Vt.

In addition, Larson has already qualified for the U.S. Equestrian Medal Finals to be held in Harrisburg and the Northern Hunter Jumper Finals to be held in Washington, D.C. and both the Massachusetts and New England Finals to be held this September in Massachusetts.

A graduate of Dana Hall, Larson will be attending the University of Vermont this September with a dual major in biology and equine studies. She will continue her riding career during college as a member of the UVM Equestrian Team. She is the daughter of Mary and Don Larson of Cohasset.

Emily Larson clears this jump impressively at recent Lake Placid show.

Moving on to round 2

Post 118 squad sweeps top seeded Norwood to advance in Legion playoffs

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

At the very least it appears the "lucky to be there" tag has been erased.

The bottom seeded Cohasset Post 118 baseball team took down top seeded Zone 6 western division champion Norwood in straight games this weekend, 2-1 and 4-0, to advance to the second round of the state Legion playoffs against Sandwich (scheduled to get underway last night at Sandwich High).

"I think we surprised (Norwood) and a lot of other people, but not ourselves," said Post 118 star Jesse Cole, who played a central role in both Saturday and Sunday wins. "We knew we could play like this."

Cole had a hand in five of Post 118's six runs in the two games, as he scored three and knocked home three, getting double credit with his two run homer that broke the ice in Sunday's clincher. This offensive show was overshadowed, however, by his mastery on the mound Sunday, as he went the route in the 4-0 win.

The hard throwing righty was on top of his game all afternoon, scattering four hits and two walks. The location on his fastball was excellent, and he moved it in and out effectively, while also mixing in his slider well, all of which clearly confounded Norwood hitters.

"Jesse really had his "A" game," year's participants were busy playing in other pro tourneys across New England.

This year, Robb Silva of Weston and Lisa Tholen of Cohasset won the A-level over Molly Adams and Matt Sizemore, both Cohasset residents. Followers of this tournament may remember Tholen from last year, when she teamed up with Sosa Amadin to go to the finals of the Super-A bracket.

Cohasset tandem Jamey Conway and Jamie Williams took the B-category, ousting Janet Robinson and Mike Rawson, both from Cohasset. Robinson and Rawson lost in the finals of the C-bracket in 2001, but played very impressive tennis despite moving up to the more difficult tournament.

Cohasset natives Shelann Durkin and Donal Cahill captured their second straight C-level championship, beating out Roger and Andrea Wade. The win earned Durkin and Cahill a berth in the B's for next year.

For those interested, your reporter did compete once again in the tournament, teaming up with All-Scholastic doubles player Jessica Purcell of Hingham High. Although we were knocked out of the running by a power-packed pair of father Jeff Grossman and daughter Lindsay Grossman, we knocked off college freshmen Christine Donohue and Jeff Scribner, my old doubles partner in high school, in the consolation bracket.

It was a tremendous performance from the Cohasset swimmers. We congratulate them on a well deserved victory. Congratulations, also, to the coaching staff who have put together this great squad. We look forward to a successful and busy week with meets against Scituate Harbor Yacht Club and Scituate's Knights of Columbus. And a final word for the many volunteers who support the team. Congratulations on being part of such a successful effort and thank you for giving up so much of your time and energy.

Cohasset Sailing Club vice commodore Anne Musto, club co-founder Tom Burke and sailing coach Patrick Rynne on the club dock at Cohasset Harbor.

Local racing program sets sail

The Cohasset Sailing Club is placing a high priority this year on bringing its sailboat racing program to a higher level. Results from this year's Hingham Regatta, held July 11 and 12, represented strong advancement in the club's standings.

In a field of 36 entrants, the team of Caroline Henderson and Mia Lieb Laffen placed 15th overall, after finishing 13th and 12th in two races on day two. Other standings: Toby Norman/Tristram Norman, 25th; John McCarthy/Nills Sceery, 27th; and Matt Fitz/Jenne Daley, 29th.

The CSC leadership team has focused efforts in three areas: acquiring highly talented instructors, purchasing state-of-the-art equipment, and emphasizing water safety procedures.

Heading the racing program this year is Vice Commodore Ann Musto. A lifetime racer and sailor herself, Musto is pleased with an upsurge in participation, especially starting at age 11. The club has hired additional racing instructors at each age level to accommodate the growth.

Leading the staff of highly competitive racing instructors is Patrick Rynne, a Junior Olympian on Brown University's varsity sailing team. Last year Rynne proved instrumental in jumping the Cohasset Sailing Club's ranking in Massachusetts Bay.

Assisting Rynne is Erin Clancy, herself in her second year with the program. Jane Mellors has also been hired to work with the beginning racers.

The Club received two generous donations this year to help further racing efforts: a $5,000 gift from the Massachusetts Maritime Society, arranged by club co-founder Tom Burke, and a van to transport the racing team, donated by Peter Capozzoli of Cohasset Imports.

The club's plans are largely the product of an extensive survey of its members conducted last year. According to Commodore Bob Deutsch, "We've looked at the program from many different angles. I believe the Cohasset community will be truly excited about the changes."

"We actively solicited membership feedback," says Deutsch. "Respondents gave us excellent grades on our racing coaches, but only average grades on our equipment. So we went to work on purchasing new boats notably two club 420s and instituting a system for maintaining existing equipment."

Moving on to round two observed Post 118 Manager Scott Arnold. "Norwood's a good hitting team, but he had the answers. The few times Jesse got in trouble, he bared down and worked his way out, just like you'd expect from a veteran like him."

Cole's most tricky jam came in the sixth inning when one of his 10 strikeouts was sandwiched around an infield single and an error to put runners at first and second, Cohasset leading at the time, 2-0. Cole, who is headed to Wofford College on a full Div. I baseball scholarship this fall, got the next hitter to pop out to short right field, but then surrendered a walk to load the bases. With the tying run on second, Jesse reached back for a little something extra to get a called third strike for the last out.

Cole gave himself all the support he would need by belting a two run homer to left center off Norwood starter Andy McNulty in the fourth after Mike Gulinello had reached second on a "hustle" double.

Cole helped his cause further when he got things going in the sixth with a leadoff double. Tim Straughn then blooped a double to center, but Cole was able to advance only to third, forced to hold up to see if the ball would be caught. A Brian Signorelli ground out plated Jesse and Eric Demahowski brought home Straughn with a base hit a moment later to make it 4-0.

The deflated Norwood squad went quietly in the top of the seventh, leaving Cohasset players looking ahead to Wednesday's meeting with Sandwich, the Zone 10 champions.

"We feel like we can play with anyone if we've got our full lineup," said Arnold, reiterating his season-long mantra. "We're not afraid of anyone."

As thrilling as this game was, it didn't hold a candle to the series opener Saturday night in Norwood, which ended less than 16 hours before game two started at East Bridgewater's Strong Field (the Post 118ers "home field" for the day, as they were unable to procure their home Scituate High Field on short notice).

Jason Connelly started masterfully on the mound, going pitch for pitch with Norwood ace Pat Foley.

As Cole would do the next afternoon, Connelly helped his own cause, drawing a walk to open the fourth, and then stealing second base. He then scored the game's first run when Cole singled him in.

However, the hosts drew even when McNulty slammed a clutch two out RBI double off Connelly in the home half of the fourth.

It was shortly after this that the game took a fateful turn, literally, as Connelly twisted his ankle badly as he hit first base while attempting to leg out an infield grounder, knocking him from the game.

The good news is nothing was torn or broken, and Connelly has been told by doctors he should be able to return to action by this weekend, providing his team is still alive. Of course, the hard-nosed Connelly, who captained the Scituate High football team as well as baseball team as a senior this year, declares he'll be ready for action prior to then.

"Jason would probably have been willing to give it a go Sunday," said Arnold with a laugh, of his invaluable pitcher/shortstop. "Obviously, we want him back, but we want him in good shape and ready to help the team."

So, with the game tied at 1-1, Arnold was forced to go for broke and turn to projected game three starter Tom Fitzgerald.

"In that situation, you've got to go for win," explained the veteran coach.

Clearly, this turned out to be great decision. The lefty from Scituate and B.C. High didn't surrender a single hit while recording the final nine Norwood outs.

"Fitzy was hitting every corner and just kept them baffled with that sweeping curve," r3eported Arnold. "After looking at Jason's hard moving fastball for four innings, that big slow one just had them shaking their heads."

Fitzgerald, who will pitch for Babson College next spring, got all the support he would need in the top of sixth, with that man Cole again stepping to the fore. Jesse drilled a one out double to left, and then scored an out later on a clutch Brian Signorelli single.

Fitzgerald shut down the final five Norwood hitters in order after surrendering a one out walk in the sixth, closing things out in style with a pair of strikeouts for the game's final two outs.

Post 118 Notes

Post 118 was scheduled to open the second round of the state championships in Sandwich last night. Game two will be played at Scituate High tonight, with game three (if necessary) back in Sandwich tomorrow.

Coach Arnold is hoping Fitzgerald will be able to bounce back on just three days rest from his three innings of work to make the start.

If Fitzy can't go, the start would likely go to Chris Carr, who pitched extremely well in his last two outings of the season.

- Hitting may grab the headlines but pitching wins. A great exhibit for that old baseball axiom: Post 118s top three pitchers — Connelly, Cole and Fitzgerald — have surrendered one earned run in their last 27 innings of combined work, with the team winning all of those games.

- Cole compared the Post 118 team to his Scituate High team that this spring parlayed an 11-9 regular season in to a run to the state sectional championships with three straight wins over higher seeded teams. Of course, the parallel isn't all that hard to draw, given that six key members of that team — Cole, Connelly, third baseman Mike Gulinello, center fielder Greg Levin, catcher/first base Brian Woods and catcher Terrence O'Brien – are also on this team.

"Our Scituate High team struggled a little bit early in the season, and lost some close games, but at the end of the season we just kept finding ways to win," noted Cole. "I'm seeing a lot of that in this team too. We're finding a way."

Peraino at center of three CHS rebuilding projects

sparking an interest in the town. Peraino played for the JV squad as a junior, the only upper classman. Starting 10 of their 14 games as the pitcher, she led the team to an impressive 11-3 record, proving the team to be at least adequately prepared to take on varsity competition in 2003.

In addition to being the team's ace pitcher, Peraino also led the club in home runs, slugging five in 12 games before coming down with a wrist injury. However, she noted that the biggest challenge of moving up to varsity will be the increased velocity of the pitching.

However, the main purpose of playing a year at the JV level was to merely re-establish softball in the town of Cohasset and try to build up the program. The dedicated coach Deb Bostwick, also Peraino's coach for the field hockey season, has been helping with the sixth grade traveling softball team. In just this one year, Peraino has noted a vast improvement in the number of athletes interested in playing for the softball team.

"We have the numbers," asserted the three-sport standout, "and we have a lot of talent coming up from the Middle School. But for right now, many people don't even know we have a softball team; no one seems to take us seriously."

Heather Peraino

Peraino hopes for a change in attitude once the program is awarded varsity status. There were 16 names on the roster for the JV team this year, and as many as 10 freshman will join the ranks next year.

Similarly, the field hockey's varsity and JV rosters will be more than filled up, with upwards of 50 participants expressing interest at the team's pre-summer meeting. Furthermore, the basketball program, which did not even exist three years ago, now cannot fit every girl interested, even with the two teams.

So Peraino may be busy. But she certainly has made the most of her time at CHS.

Police association fundraiser to begin

The Cohasset Police Association will be holding its annual fundraiser beginning on Monday July 29 and continuing through next week.

Residents and business owners can expect to be called sometime next week. Donations will be used to fund local charities, non profits, and civic activities.

The association donates money to the Recreation Department, Little League, American Cancer Society, American Legion, Senior Center, Deer Hill Band, Cohasset After Prom Committee, and several other organizations. The association also holds an annual Senior Citizen Breakfast and a cookout for the Recreation Department's kids summer program.

Alarm records being updated

All of us felt the effects from September 11, 2001.

All of us can help.

150 people—parents, friends, co-workers—from the MetroWest and 495 Region were victims of the tragic events. 150 people of 248 on the ill-fated flights were part of our extended family.

United Way of Tri-County community partners have responded to the needs of families touched by the tragedy, providing counseling and other direct aid, and helping friends and neighbors cope with the aftermath.

Since that awful day, 1400 local United Ways across the country have mobilized to lend a helping hand. Nearly $400 million dollars has been raised by The September 11th Fund. Donations made to date are supporting on-going rescue efforts and will be there after the immediate relief agencies have left the scene. Multiple organizations will continue to provide counseling, grief support and recovery services to those in need as they face the long-term after-effects of this event. We thank all who have contributed to help those directly affected by this tragedy.

But in the national call to action, we should never forget the urgent needs of our neighbors, friends and co-workers right here in our service area. Our United Way has been kicking off company-based campaigns and individual giving efforts with a goal of raising $4,583,338 to support programs addressing our service area's most pressing issues.

Right now, we need to help at a national level. But we also need to keep our eye on things right here at home. We need to be sure that the Tri-County area is not only ready to face our own disasters, but also able to assist with the smaller, more quiet tragedies that happen every day in the lives of our families, friends and neighbors.

United Way is about caring, community by community. And through building strong communities, we build a strong nation. Thank you for supporting our nation and our local communities through the United Way.

Let's keep the united spirit going to help here at home.

A pilgrimage to Plimoth Plantation

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

It's been a tough morning in the Brown household. The kids are off playing somewhere, so it's relatively quiet, but the weather is hot, and Peter is working up a sweat on the roof, where he's been replacing some of the thatching. But his wife Martha has it worse. She's inside the cramped, dirt-floored house, toiling away at a black kettle filled with steaming groats she's just removed from a small but intense fire.

Of course, it probably doesn't help that a couple dozen people are clustered around Peter's ladder, and are throwing questions at him as he climbs up and down.

"I'm a planter by trade, master," he says to one of them. "But other fings [things] have got to get done."

At the same time, another dozen people are crammed inside the house, watching Martha spoon the hot groats into a yellow bowl.

"The corn's free," she explains to one of them. "It don't cost us nought."

Welcome to Plimoth Plantation, where the year is always 1627. The small, dusty village — stunningly accurate in its detailed recreation of Pilgrim life — is peopled by "Colonial interpreters" (don't call them actors) who dress and speak and live (from 9 to 5) exactly as the folks who got off the Mayflower at nearby Plymouth Rock did seven years earlier.

And they never break character. Martha jokes about her children (who are never there), saying to a visitor, "Wee little Mary is good for nuffin'; just a lump of flesh on legs." Meanwhile, Peter has found two unaccompanied visitors. They're playing with some food in his house. Bringing them into the act, Peter says, "All right lads, you'll come with me," then leads them outside where he orders them to pull weeds. Surprisingly, they do as told.

"Mom, they're making 'em do work!" exclaims another young visitor.

The historical accuracy of Plimoth Plantation is so complete that it's rather odd, a half-hour later, to enter a break room, and find Peter — real name Peter Walsh — all decked out in his tattered baggy yellow Pilgrim outfit, floppy brown hat to his side, hunched over a computer screen.

Martha — real name Mindy Weymouth — cinched tightly into an array of petticoats and skirts, joins him to discuss how they go about living in the past.

"I think it's a brain fever that first leads you here," laughs Weymouth, who is a descendant of a Pilgrim family. "I moved to Plymouth around 15 years ago, and with all my history here I had to find out more. I kept coming to the Plantation and wandering around, and I fell in love with the place and wanted to work here."

Hired in 1996, Weymouth, who is a pharmacy technician and an animal health technologist in the off season, says she had no thoughts of pursuing an acting career.

"No, I was just a bored housewife wanting to do something a little interesting with her life," she says.

Walsh, who started working at the Plantation in 1998, says, "I came here because I wanted to meet bored housewives."

And neither did Walsh think about acting as a career. He came to the Plantation after many years in sales and marketing at Capitol Records. Both on-season and off, Walsh is a member of the punk band Meat Depressed.

"I play guitar and sing and curse," he says.

British invasion part 2

Reinvented Hollies make a return to U.S.

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Everyone can instantly spot their best known 1960s and 70s hits, oldies and classic-rock radio staples such as "Bus Stop," "Look Through Any Window," "He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother," "Long Cool Woman (In a Black Dress)" and "The Air That I Breathe." But not all listeners these days might recognize the actual name of the band itself.

Part of the reason for such ambiguity is that the Hollies, fondly recalled by longtime fans as one of the original mop-topped 60s British Invasion bands, have not performed under that name in the United States since 1983. This summer, the Hollies' 40th Anniversary Tour finally brings the band, with several original members still on board, across the Atlantic once again.

The tour swings into Cohasset on Saturday (Aug. 3) when the Hollies headline a 60s Mod-era pop bill at the South Shore Music Circus. The opening act is the current touring version of the Lovin' Spoonful ("Do You Believe In Magic," "Daydream," "Summer In the City") and show time is 8 p.m.

It should be noted that not among the original Hollies on this four-decade celebration trek is Allan Clarke, the liquid-voiced lead vocalist on all of the aforementioned hits plus numerous others during the 60s and 70s. As the band's prime-era lead, Clarke usually rode the top of the sprightly, three-part vocal harmonies that became the Hollies' signature, and were supported by other originals, bassist Tony Hicks and guitarist Graham Nash, who would later take his formidable harmony-building skills to Crosby Stills & Nash (and Young).

"We've always seen every year that we've continued playing and every change we've been through as an evolution of the band more than anything else. Every new member can bring a fresh perspective and somehow move the band's sound forward. Plus we've never stopped touring, we're always playing somewhere, even if the scene is not as frantic as it was in the 60s."
Hollies drummer Bobby Elliot

In the current Hollies, who despite their absence from the states have toured consistently throughout Europe and Australia in the 80s and 90s, Clarke's distinct spot is filled by vocalist Carl Wayne, ex-frontman of the British band the Move, who are best known in the U.S. as the original group vehicle of Electric Light Orchestra leader/Travelling Wilbury Jeff Lynne. Both Wayne and the Hollies have reportedly made the transition well, as for the past two years the new band incarnation has won rave reviews from both critics and fans alike while on the road in the U.K., Australia and New Zealand.

Steve Irwin's career is a croc

Star of "Crocodile Hunter" puts his money where his mouth is

By Amy Amatangelo
BOSTON HERALD

Decked out in his trademark khaki shirt and shorts, Steve Irwin, television's popular "Crocodile Hunter," enters the room looking as though he just stepped out of the Australian Outback. He's in town to promote his first movie, "The Crocodile Hunter: Collision Course," and there seems to be little distinction between his on- and offscreen persona.

He peppers the conversation with words such as "mate" and "crikey." His eyes get wide with excitement. He bounces enthusiastically in his chair. His arms wave around to expressively and emphatically make his point. You can almost see that proverbial twinkle in his eye.

These are the endearing character traits that draw millions of viewers to Irwin's multiple television shows. And it is this engaging persona that director John Stainton didn't want to lose when the intrepid wildlife crusader hit the big screen.

As a result, Irwin and his wife and constant co-star, Terri, worked without a script and were unaware of the movie's plot. "John didn't want to lose us to the Hollywood scene," Irwin says. "He didn't want us to become actors. He wanted us to stay completely natural. He never let us see a script. We ad-libbed the whole way through."

The couple saw the movie for the first time at a premiere earlier this month in Los Angeles. "I was stunned and thoroughly amazed," Irwin says. "The most surprising part was seeing me up there and actually feeling the adrenaline of catching those crocs. It didn't feel like me. The movie actually captured me; I felt like I was there."

"I don't think any of us were prepared for the overwhelming feeling of suspense," Terri says. "Because you've done the movie, you know no one is actually going to get killed by that crocodile."

As he does on his television shows, Irwin performed all his stunts in the movie. "My life is not called stunt work," he says. "I'm rescuing animals whether the cameras are on or off. So it's not stunts; it's part of daily life."

But when it came time for his big fight scene against the film's villain (played by Lachy Hulme), and set atop a moving van, Irwin did have to learn one thing. "They had to retrain me to fight this bloke without actually hurting him."

Steve Irwin worked without a script in "Crocodile Hunter."

Although Irwin's television show and movie are entertainment, he hopes viewers will take away a bigger environmental message. " 'Crocodile Hunter' is all about getting the conservation message to rub off, not about getting up on the big screen and preaching, lecturing or doing the schoolteacher thing. It's about, 'Come on a journey with me. Let's capture these crocs and relocate them.' "

Terri is clearly the calmer half of the pair, but she is equally passionate about the cause. "One hundred percent of what we earn from 'Crocodile Hunter' goes back into conservation. This is who we are. This is what we do," she says. "We're not actors and Steve is like the real-life action hero. He's like the guy people make movies about. That's why I love and admire him so much. When we're done with this movie, who knows how big our slice of the pie will be, but whatever we end up with will go 100 percent back into conservation. When you see our movie, you know that you are directly helping with conservation."

The couple, who have been married for 10 years, attribute much of their success to always being together. Their 3-year-old daughter, Bindi Sue, is so acclimated to the outdoor life that she once made friends with a scorpion when the family went camping.

"The family who catches crocs together stays together," Irwin says.

"The Crocodile Hunter: Collision Course" is now playing.

Coca Cola Chicken

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Everybody in the continental United States has probably heard of beer-can chicken. You know the recipe. A chicken is impaled in an open can of beer and then grill-roasted. I wanted to revisit the technique, get it down pat, and then see if Coca-Cola, the darling of many southern cooks, wouldn't make a better flavoring liquid than beer.

The first issue is whether I needed to brine the chicken or not. A simple test — one bird brined and one not – quickly convinced me that the brined bird was juicier and more flavorful. I used a mixture of one cup kosher (or 1/2 cup table) salt and 1/4 cup sugar to two quarts of water. The small amount of sugar gives a more balanced flavor and also produces a more deeply colored skin.

Next, I wondered if the type of liquid mattered. I knew that beer worked well but I also tried Coke, Dr. Pepper, root beer, ginger ale. All except the ginger ale added deep flavor and a sweetness that worked well with the smoky fire. I also tried lemonade, white wine, and iced tea but none were as good as Coca-Cola. For fun, I added a tablespoon of rum to the coke and came up with Cuba Libre chicken. (The difference is marginal but you can actually taste a slightly deeper, warmer taste with the rum.) For best results, the can should be 2/3 to 3/4 full and extra holes need to be punched in the top to allow more steam to escape.

I then wondered if the can itself was doing the chicken any favors and made an interesting discovery. The can acts like a vertical roaster. The skin doesn't stick to the grill and it browns evenly. Of course, the Coca-Cola also adds a lot of flavor and produces juicier meat.

The last step was to come up with a simple recipe for a rub. Wet rubs were hard to work with and using olive oil or butter on the skin made it less crispy. The simple remedy was a dry rub applied both on top of and under the skin before roasting. I came up with a simple combination of cumin, chili pepper, coriander, pepper, sugar, cinnamon, and allspice which is both sweet and peppery, the classic barbecue combination.

As for cooking itself, you need to use indirect heat and a covered grill to avoid drying out the breast meat before the rest of the bird is cooked. The method you choose depends on your grill. If you can place the chicken on one side of the grill and the cover still fits, then build the fire on the other side. (The chicken will need to be rotated 180 degrees halfway through cooking.) If, however, you need to put the chicken in the center of the grill for the top to fit, then build two piles of coals on either side. A three and a half pound bird seemed to work best (larger birds will overcook on the outside) and easily fit onto my grill.

COCA-COLA GRILL-ROASTED CHICKEN

You can use any similar soda you like such as root beer, Dr. Pepper, or Pepsi. Lighter sodas such as ginger ale are less flavorful. You can also use beer as a substitute. If the cover of your grill will not fit with the chicken to one side, place the chicken in the middle of the grill and place two equal piles of lit coals on either side.

For the dry spice rub:
1 tablespoon ground cumin
1 tablespoons chili powder
1 teaspoon ground black pepper
1 teaspoon ground coriander
1 teaspoon sugar
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon ground allspice

For the chicken:
1 cup kosher salt or 1/2 cup table salt
1/4 cup granulated sugar
1 whole chicken about 3 1/2 pounds
1 recipe dry spice rub (see above)
1 12-ounce can Coca-Cola (or Dr. Pepper, Pepsi, or root beer)

1. Combine all ingredients for spice rub in a small bowl.

2. Dissolve salt and sugar in two quarts cold water in a large container. (You can use a large Zip-Loc plastic bag.) Immerse chicken in water and refrigerate for one hour. Remove chicken from brine and rinse inside and out with cool running water. Pat chicken dry with paper towels. Apply spice rub all over chicken inside and out. Lift up skin over breast and thighs and rub directly onto meat. Pour out or drink about 1/2 cup Coke. Poke two extra holes into the top of the can. Slide chicken over can so the drumsticks reach the bottom of the can.

2. Meanwhile light grill. Prepare fire for indirect cooking by placing all of the coals (about 50 briquettes) to one side. (See recipe note above.) Place prepared chicken on cool side of the grill using the drumsticks and can to form a tripod. Cover and cook for about 30 minutes. Turn chicken 180 degrees, cover and cook 25 to 35 minutes more or until an instant read thermometer inserted into the thigh registers 170 degrees. Transfer chicken to a platter and let rest for ten minutes being careful to keep the can upright. Carefully lift chicken off the can. Carve and serve immediately.

Maintaining the July landscape

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Each morning I awaken to the cheerful melodies of robins and wrens announcing the dawning of another glorious day in the summertime garden. Iridescent blue-green tree swallows gracefully glide through the landscape gathering tasty treats for their ravenous fledglings who have recently emerged from their nesting box in the meadow. Flashes of yellow appear in the treetops as goldfinches and warblers flit from branch to branch. Hummingbirds zip through the garden, pausing for magical moments among the flowers only a few steps from where I stand watching in awe as they hover in midair while sipping nectar from the curious blossoms of beebalm. Magnificent swallowtail butterflies and fritillaries float through the borders, perching on purple coneflowers and butterfly bushes. Throughout the day, the garden is a nature lover's dream as birds and butterflies, frogs, bunnies and toads share the bounty of the summertime! landscape.

Mother Nature has kindly provided a little moisture to slightly ease our dry conditions and the forecast for the coming week suggests more may be in the offing, but most landscapes are still parched. Lawns and gardens require a minimum of 1 inch of water per week during the active growing season to maintain their health and vigor. It is better to provide a deep, thorough soaking of your plantings once or twice a week, than to superficially water every day. Light sprinklings tend to cause plant roots to come to the surface looking for moisture, making plants more susceptible to drought, fluctuations in temperature, insects and diseases and eventually to winter damage. Prolonged watering promotes deeper roots systems where soil temperatures are cooler and plants are more likely to survive and thrive.

When possible, water early in the day Consider the installation of timing mechanisms to allow sprinklers to come on in the early morning hours, prior to dawn. This reduces waste from evaporation and enables plant foliage to dry off before dark diminishing the potential for powdery mildew and other fungal diseases not to mention slugs and snails. The acquisition of a rain gauge is a handy means of monitoring how much moisture your plants are receiving from the combined efforts of Mother Nature and sprinklers, but any straight-sided container can be used to collect water and a ruler inserted to determine the total accumulation. Soaker hoses and drip irrigation are the most efficient means of providing water directly to the root systems of your plants.

Should your community be subject to water restrictions, try to focus your watering in one or two areas each time watering is permitted and thoroughly drench your plants rather than applying a light, superficial spray over your entire landscape. Give priority to newly planted trees and shrubs to ensure their survival as well as to favorite or expensive plants. When using a hand held hose in the evening, try to water individual plants at the base rather than as an overhead spray.

During the heat of the summer, summer mulches will greatly improve the moisture-retentive properties of your soil while reducing fluctuations in soil temperature. A 2-inch layer of shredded bark is an attractive and practical finishing touch to any garden or foundation planting with the added benefit of reducing weed germination. Set lawn mowers to a height of 2 to 3 inches to shade the soil surface and promote deeper root systems.

The removal of spent flowers and flower stalks, a practice known as "deadheading", should be performed whenever possible Deadheading gives the garden a neat, tidy appearance but perhaps more importantly, it enables plants to put their energy into making new growth, including the formation of stronger root systems and larger plants, and in many plants it encourages the development of new flowers.

A plant grows and flowers for the purpose of creating new plants, usually through the production of seed. Annuals, in particular, complete their life cycle in one growing season and work endlessly to flower and subsequently to make seeds to scatter for the following year. If spent flowers are removed, the plant is more likely to continue producing new flowers in an effort to produce seeds. Marigolds, petunias, cosmos and zinnias, to name only a few, respond positively to the frequent removal of spent blossoms. Be sure to pinch or snip the entire stalk and spent blossoms of petunias rather than just pulling off the faded flowers as seed pods usually form in the capsules left behind when only the spent blossoms are plucked. Some annuals, such as impatiens and begonias, continue to flower profusely without removing spent flowers. The majority of perennial plants should also be deadheaded to encourage the formation of larger clumps or to promote secondary bloom stalks.

Biennial plants including foxgloves, money plant, rose campion and forget-me-nots, should be allowed to go to seed each year to ensure a perpetual source of these plants which take two years to complete their life cycles, the first year producing only foliage followed by flowers the second growing season. Sprinkle seeds from ripe seed pods in locations where you would prefer to have them grow next season although there are bound to be surprise offspring all over the border.

As dusk fell on a sultry summer evening, a robin sang from the treetops and a frog croaked from the water garden, a pleasant conclusion to another day of beauty among the flowers.

Both Colonial interpreters admit that this job has kept them busy, right from the start.

"They give you a pile of books that comes up to your knees and a few weeks of training," says Walsh of his first days there. "Then you get to be the mute Pilgrim for a week or so, where they sit you down next to somebody that knows a lot of stuff."

There's no script, per se. It's mostly improvisation, but within a specific framework.

"It's interpreting life from a 17th century English viewpoint," explains Walsh. "There was an old 'Saturday Night Live' skit — 'If it's not Scottish, it's crap.' Well, that's pretty much how the English felt about everything."

"Sometimes that insults people horribly," adds Weymouth, describing the reaction to their Puritan preachings. "But we want to get across that back in the 17th century, the English viewpoint in many ways was very insulting."

Walsh and Weymouth work together as Peter and Martha Brown two days a week, and play different pilgrims — apart from each other — on three other days, which helps to keep them fresh and not be stuck in one part.

"It's very difficult when you're first starting because you get roped into set responses to everything," says Weymouth. "After a while you'll go crazy and you'll either leave or you'll [do more research]. If someone asks you about the food, you can go down a whole different road with the food, or with religion or the kings and queens of the times."

Walsh admits he frequently has to deal with kids who overstep the boundaries.

"Sometimes, just making them realize they're not on their turf anymore will do a lot to put them straight," he says. "If you get children that are out of control, you just try to get their chaperone to do something."

And there's nothing wrong with being stern — after all, it's historically accurate.

"You'll ask them [to do something]," Walsh says, "and they'll say no. And then you'll say, 'I wasn't asking you, I'm telling you. You're a child and I'm an adult.' And that way, you're teaching them about the order of things in the 17th century. A child would never question an adult back then. We'll have kids weeding and the parents looking at us and saying, 'I can't them to do anything.' "

But difficult kids were the least of the interpreters' problems when the Plantation's operating budget was cut by 30 percent — $2 million — last year due to a revenue decline from a combination of the economic downturn, a decrease in philanthropic contributions, and the continuing fallout in tourism since Sept. 11. Of the 260 people employed there, 39 lost their jobs — some in accounting and housekeeping, many of them interpreters. So while there were still a lot of visitors, there were fewer Pilgrims wandering the plantations dirt roads and working in their houses for them to visit.

"It's still horribly tough," admits Weymouth. "When we have large groups coming in, and you're in the house talking and cooking, there are people waiting outside who can't get in."

"The reorganization of the department hasn't kept up with our needs," says Walsh. "You obviously want to have cooking demonstrations going on. But then it's, 'Here come the crowds.' So we go outside so we can deal with larger groups of people."

It's challenging, but the rewards often come in the form of education.

"It's when you hear them say, 'Oh, I didn't know that,' " says Weymouth. "You have a certain amount of power here to change people's views, to get them thinking about things. I love to have an effect on people."

Plimoth Plantation is at Exit 4 off of Route 3 in Plymouth, and is open daily through Thanksgiving weekend. Call 508-746-1622 or check the Website at www.plimoth.org.

with bassist/vocalist Hicks, offered these comments on the band's endurance and longevity by phone from his country home in Colne-Skipton, U.K.

"We've never really been slowed down by the loss of any one band member for too long," Elliot said. "Even in the late 60s, when Graham (Nash) left the band, we came back even stronger with Allan (Clarke) more in the forefront and even bigger hits like `He Ain't Heavy' and `Long Cool Woman.' We've always seen every year that we've continued playing and every change we've been through as an evolution of the band more than anything else. Every new member can bring a fresh perspective and somehow move the band's sound forward. Plus we've never stopped touring, we're always playing somewhere, even if the scene is not as frantic as it was in the 60s."

Like that eternal figurehead of the British Invasion - the Beatles - as well as numerous other U.K. bands of the era who specialized in well-crafted, harmony-laden, guitar-ringing pop/rock, the Hollies drew their main influences from earlier American masters of the forms, such as Buddy Holly and the Everly Brothers. It was, in fact, from none other than Holly that the young quintet forming in Manchester in 1962 took its own name.

"To us, that was always very accessible music, American roots that we're part R&B, part folk and part country," Elliot said. "It was ultimately where we learned the three-part harmonies which we even managed to do onstage before the Beatles."

"In our live shows, we cover all the major hits, of course. But we also like to shuffle things around quite a bit and pick out some of the lesser known older material as well as some of the newer songs that we've written with Carl (Wayne). Mixing the sets up from show to show keeps the sound fresh, interesting and contemporary. We always try to never do our shows the same way twice," Elliot said.

In a similar case to the Hollies, openers the Lovin' Spoonful will also be appearing in a form short of the full original lineup at the Cohasset show, without leader John Sebastian or semi-legendary "wild man" guitarist Zal Yanovsky, but with founding members Steve Boone and Joe Butler. South Shore fans of Sebastian do not have to feel passed over, however, as earlier on Saturday the ex-Spoonful frontman will be performing solo on Scituate's waterfront as part of the Heritage Days Festival.

Borders in Kingston presents a series of children's events. July 27 at noon.. This week's theme Whale Storytime. Enjoy some whale tales. "Rainbow fish and the Big blue Whale, by Marcus Pfister. Another good one is "The big Blue Whale, in which Nicola Davies provides a look at nature's largest living marvel. The spare, lyrical text often uses examples from the child's world to help youngsters understand this great creature. For example, the blue whale's skin is "Springy and smooth like a hard-boiled egg" and its eye is "big as a teacup." Nick Maland's pen-and-ink and wash illustrations capture both the majesty and vulnerability of the blue whale of which only 10,000 remain.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JULY 24

Gear up for a hectic day. The moon enters Aquarius at 2:40 a.m. and the full moon culminates at 5:07 a.m. Venus forms a challenging 90-degree contact to Pluto at 8:38 a.m. Move cautiously in business or romance. Watch out for negative thinking, obsessing. In the afternoon the Aquarius moon opposes Mercury and Mars. Slow your pace. Don't act on impulse. Pay extra attention to details. A lunar alignment to Neptune this evening offers an opportunity to relax and unwind.

THURSDAY, JULY 25

Alignments of Mercury, Mars and Neptune in the next few days place all important decisions, signings, new beginnings off limits. Things may not be as they appear. It may be difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. Mercury and Mars conjoin at 11:20 a.m., making for a fast-paced morning. Stop, look and listen. The moon travels in Aquarius all day, highlighting group activities, humanitarian projects.

FRIDAY, JULY 26

The Aquarius moon aligns with Uranus at 7:46 a.m. and becomes inactive. In addition, a polarity of Mercury and Neptune, generates a sleepy, dreamy mood. This influence is fine for developing projects that require imaginative thinking. On the other hand, it may be difficult to concentrate on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. At 12:04 p.m. the moon enters laidback Pisces, prompting you to get an early start to the weekend.

SATURDAY, JULY 27

The combination of a Pisces moon and applying Mars/Neptune alignment makes this a perfect weekend to rest and recharge your batteries. Put practical decisions or work projects on the back burner. Keep it light and choose your words carefully between 3:52-6:52 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align.

SUNDAY, JULY 28

A Mars/Neptune polarity takes the spotlight today. In addition, the moon travels in Pisces, ruled by the planet Neptune. That means that this a great day for veging out and catching up on rest and relaxation. Water sports, dance, photography are highlighted. Mars opposes Neptune at 2:32 p.m., 10-degrees Leo/Aquarius. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 10:01 p.m., when it interacts with Jupiter. The moon enters Aries at 11:38 p.m. An alignment of Mercury and Pluto prompts you to pay attention to your dreams and follow your intuition.

MONDAY, JULY 29

The moon travels in ambitious Aries today and tomorrow, setting a brisk pace. You can be most productive, if you are organized and stick to your game plan. The green light is on for new starts across the board. Go for the gold. You can make great progress toward career or professional goals.

TUESDAY, JULY 30

An Aries moon reminds you to channel high energy constructively. Take on a busy work agenda. Zero in on jobs that require physical labor and exertion. Get back on track with exercise and fitness programs. Launch important ventures, make significant moves and changes in your business or personal life.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 31

Take it slow and easy this morning. Don't overdo or overextend. Know your limits. The Aries moon aligns with Jupiter at 11:48 a.m. and becomes inactive. Planetary influences turn around completely at 12:17 p.m., when the moon enters stable Taurus. This is a wonderful afternoon for working in your garden or developing creative projects. Put important signings or decisions on hold for a few days. Get extra rest tonight.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1

The planet Jupiter enters Leo today, a clear signal that this is a month to concentrate on relaxing and enjoying life to the fullest. The last quarter phase of the moon arrives at 6:22 a.m. This moon will decrease in light until August 8, when the Leo new moon occurs. In the morning the moon aligns with Neptune, and a sun/Neptune polarity occurs this evening. Don't take anything too seriously. Kick back and mellow out completely.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 2

A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Saturn impacts the morning. Financial, investment or property issues can no longer be swept under the rug. Now is the time to work out a plan or budget in order to attain long-term goals. Potentially difficult influences begin to ease up this afternoon, when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Venus. At 6:58 p.m. the Taurus moon becomes inactive until 11:46 p.m., when it enters Gemini.

Corner may not be west but it's wild

DiNero's expansion plans worry some

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

West Corner is a neighborhood with an identity crisis.

To begin with, it's not even in the west.

The four-way intersection is parts of North Cohasset, East Hingham and South Hull. It would have been nice if years back Charles West (originally it was called West's Corner) would have at least had the courtesy to build his store west of somewhere.

The three towns converge in a remarkable display of the inane nature of arbitrary political markings.

The double yellow line that divides Hull Street, the main thoroughfare through the Corner, also divides Hingham and Cohasset as well as Plymouth and Norfolk Counties. The con-

Cohasset, Hingham and Hull all share West Corner which is not in the western part of any of the towns. Some residents say the corner is becoming more congested while others say, it's always been that way.

Harbor needs some help

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Is Cohasset Harbor a pristine area in need of no infrastructure upgrades or dilapidated place with need of extensive upgrading?

Neither.

That's what most people who responded to a survey from the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private entity working with the town on village and harbor improvement plans.

Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, said the purpose of the survey was to help the community reach a consensus of goals and objectives of the planning effort.

The survey was mailed to all 182 resident households and businesses in the harbor area

Cohasset Central Cemetery is being considered for listing on the National Register of Historic Places.

Cemetery to take its place in history

Seeks listing on National Register

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's no secret that Cohasset Central Cemetery, which sits on about 4.3 acres off North Main Street and Joy Place, is a beautiful and peaceful historic place.

With graves dating back to the early 1700s and funerary art by renowned Colonial stone carvers like Scituate's Jacob Vinal and his son, Jacob Jr. — the old cemetery, whose hillocks overlook Little Harbor, is a town treasure.

And now, the cemetery that contains some 500 gravestones is poised for inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places — the federal government's official listing of cultural resources and historic properties worthy of preservation.

"Cemeteries tell stories."
— Anne Montague, Cohasset Central Cemetery

Thanks to efforts of the cemetery trustees, particularly current president Anne Montague and past president Jo Ann Ford— who tackled the extensive application process with the help of town archivist David Wadsworth and Deirdre Barrett, who researched the gravestone art — the Massachusetts Historical Commission will consider nominating Cohasset Central Cemetery for the National Register at its Sept. 11 board meeting.

The National Register provides recognition that a property is of significance to the nation, state or the community.

And apart from the funerary

Pollutants go down the drain

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

As long as they're doing the job of keeping water off the streets and highways — most people don't pay much attention to storm drains.

But, in fact, storm drains — or catch basins — can provide the key to what is dubbed "non-point source" pollution of waterways and wetlands, and water pollution is something most people should care about.

"At this time, there are no formal maps in Cohasset that detail storm-drain system information; it all resides in the heads of the DPW staff that have been working in the town for years."
— Cohasset Storm Drain Mapping Initiative

Thanks largely to efforts led by Cohasset and the North and South Rivers Watershed Association (NSRWA) – the state has made a $54,000 grant available to help map storm drains in Cohasset and work collaboratively with Scituate and Norwell to provide a model for other towns to map their own storm-drain systems. The town will also contribute some matching funds and in-kind services to the project bringing the total project budget to about $109,000.

"Storm drains and failing septic systems are the primary sources of pollution in our waterways today," says Bill Stanton, executive director of the NSRWA.

Non-point source pollution is hard to pinpoint because it doesn't come from a particular place, like a factory which may have an out-fall pipe leading directly into a nearby stream.

The pollution that finds it way into storm drains can come from all over the place and wends its way through underground pipes into waterways. Pollutants can be caused by gasoline, oil and other motor vehicle contaminants, human and animal fecal matter, and lawn fertilizers – just Greg O'Brien doesn't have the typical teenager's summer job and he's glad.

There will no serving fast food, teaching swimming lessons, or landscaping for this Cohasset High School senior. Instead, Greg will be examining and mapping all 900 catch basins in town.

"This is the kind of job I hoped for," Greg says. "The experience is incomparable to other more typical summer jobs."

Developing a data base of the town's catch basins – also called storm drains — is going to help the town comply with federal regulations under the Clean Water Act.

Storm drains are big polluters because they collect unfiltered runoff, much of which is from streets and parking lots. Along with the water comes oil, gasoline and other hazardous materials.

Greg understands the magnitude and the importance of the task.

"It's significant for the town which is going to use this information and rely on it," he

HARBOR WALK

The sidewalk and fencing along Border Street at the harbor has been the subject of much debate in recent months. However, a majority of respondents to a survey from the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation agree both need attention. See story, page one.

This week in COHASSET

Business owner has train concerns

Angel Alvarez, owner of A.B.B. Optical at 1 Pleasant St., came before selectmen last week and said he was surprised he hasn't been more involved with the Greenbush project. Alvarez said he recently received a letter in the mail informing him of the impending right of way work and was caught completely off guard.

"No one is going to bat for the small business owner," he said. "I wanted to expand and then I looked at the plans and saw there's going to be a road there."

Alvarez, who has special optical equipment which is very sensitive to vibration, said he was concerned about the negative impact the train would have on his business.

However, Town Manager Mark Haddad assured Alvarez that his concerns would be examined.

"It's in the mitigation agreement that the MBTA needs to speak with you regarding those issues," he said. "You'll be taken care of."

Meetings scheduled

The following meetings take place at Town Hall unless otherwise noted:

Selectmen, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 6

Conservation Commission, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 8 and Aug. 22

Historical Commission, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 12

Library Building Committee, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 14 at the Paul Pratt Library

Planning Board, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 7 and Aug. 21

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m., Tuesdays. The next meeting is Aug. 6.

CRC is part-time

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation has reduced its hours of operation from full-time to part-time. As a result the CRC will no longer have regular office hours. The office will be open in the day or evening by appointment only.

If you need assistance or would like to make an appointment please leave a voice message for Dean Rizzo, Executive Director at (781) 383-2449. The CRC office is located at 87 Elm St., which is across from Kimball's By The Sea.

Committee vacancies

Vacancies currently exist on several town committees. Anyone interested in serving should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105, or stop by the office on the second floor of Town Hall.

Correction to 40B story

Due to a reporting error, a page-one story in last week's Mariner incorrectly said Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick attended anti-40B meeting at Cohasset Travel in Shaw's Plaza on July 22. Chapter 40B is the state's affordable housing law.

Chittick was not at the meeting, nor were any members of the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The Mariner regrets the error.

Hotline tackles train queries

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Contractor Cashman Balfour Beatty plans to reach out to Hingham to keep residents aware of every phase of the construction of the railway line through the towns.

"The success of this project depends on letting people know what is going to happen in their back yards," CBB outreach manager Thomas Carroll said. "Outreach makes it possible for us to be good at our jobs."

CBB has established a 24-hour-hotline for all five communities the railroad line will traverse (Weymouth, Braintree, Hingham, Cohasset, and Scituate) at 1-781-682-6350. Residents are welcome to call with problems, questions, or concerns.

"The success of this project depends on letting people know what is going to happen in their back yards."
— Thomas Carroll, CBB outreach manager

When a call comes into the hot line, Carroll is paged on his beeper. A reporter, asking for a demonstration, called the hotline number.

A short time later, Carroll's beeper blipped and he showed the reporter's message coming up on the screen.

"There you are," he said.

Carroll stressed that the safety of the public and the safety of the workers are the priority during the Greenbush construction.

"We will be working close to peoples' homes. Everyone who works for CBB has to go through safety training. All employees of CBB and its subcontractors have to pass a drug test. All employees must carry a badge," Carroll said.

CBB asks residents to call the hotline in the event a Greenbush line worker cannot show a badge upon request.

A complete schedule of the work to be done and project updates are available on local cable and at Web site www.cbb-greenbush.com.

CBB has a track record of "four years of caring" during its Big Dig work in Boston's North End, Carroll said.

In recognition of his outreach working in the North End, Carroll will receive an "unprecedented" honor on July 31, according to CBB media person Ellen Marlette.

"East Boston/North End City Councilor Paul Scapicchio will read, at the request of and in behalf of his constituents, an official resolution in City Council Chambers at Boston City Hall honoring Tom for his exemplary Big Dig-related community outreach in the commercial and residential neighborhoods of the North End over a nine year period," Marlette said.

There will be a presentation in Boston City Council Chambers at 12:30 p.m. Many residents are expected to attend, in addition to councilors and dignitaries, according to Marlette.

"While I realize that this is Boston news, I thought it might reassure folks in Weymouth, Braintree, Hingham, Scituate, and Cohasset that they have a truly dedicated, unassuming young community outreach person with major league experience. There has been little positive Big Dig news, and this unsolicited honor from 'just plain folks' augers well for community relations for Greenbush," Marlette said.

Gasoline contamination site to get another look by DEP

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Residents near the corner of South Main and Summer Streets are getting nervous.

The morning air in their neighborhood is often tinged with the odor of gasoline, particularly in the area of a retention pool on the grounds of St. Anthony's Church.

"It's an oily kind of a smell and generally I smell it in the morning when I go to church when the air is very still," said Jeff Waal of 36 Old Pasture Road. "It's very disctinctive. You know that it's there. It's not something you have to stop and think about."

Making the lingering odor even more worrisome is the specter of the contaminated site across the street at 151 South Main St.

Cohasset Service Center currently occupies the site, but a decade ago it was a gas station which is most likely when the contamination occured. The site entered the radar of the DEP on Sep. 26, 1991, officially, though records before 1993 are spotty and it could have been reported earlier. On Oct. 24, 1997 it received Tier 1B conatmination status, a ranking one step from the most severe initial rating, Tier 1A. A Tier 1A site requires direct involvement by the Department of Environmental Protection.

But since August 2000, when owner Francesco D. Scarpino successfully filed for Financial Inability Status, which relieved him of obligation to fund the cleaning because of financial hardship, the project has stalled and the contaminants have stayed, which has area residents worried.

The first warning flags were raised when workers for contractor J. D'Amico discovered the contamination in 1998 while digging a trench in the area. The project was halted and the soil replaced pending a clean-up plan from the Department of Environmental Protection. In April of 1999, H. Keith DuBois of Monadnock Environmental Services was contracted by the DEP to serve as the Licensed Site Professional for the site. DuBois estimated that the immediate response action phase of the clean-up could cost up to $112,000 and the total clean-up could range from $450,000 to $900,000.

"The bottom line there is no immediate threat to public health."
— Ross Edwards, a spokesman for the DEP.

"I'm very concerned about the situation," said Robert Ross of 159 South Main St. "I have a three-year-old daughter."

Ross' father Walter, also of 159 South Main St, wrote a letter to the board of selectmen dated July 22, after Scarpino hired a private contractor to hook up to the sewer line a few weeks back. According to the elder Ross' letter, the contractor encountered contaminants and notified DEP and the Fire Department. Chief Roger W. Lincoln ordered the project shut down.

Scarpino was not available for comment.

"We are deeply concerned that the sewer line hook-up stub trench has provided an avenue for the contaminants created at 151 South Main St to travel onto our property," reads the letter.

But health officials with the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection say the mere presence of an odor does not necessarily indicate danger.

"The bottom line there is no immediate threat to public health," said Ross Edwards, a spokesman for the DEP. " DEP stepped in a year ago in April and May of 2001 and sampled indoor air and basement and sump pump water at 140, 143, and 159 South Main Street. Without the exact number at hand, we determined there were very low levels of volatile compounds both in the air and in the water."

Edwards was confident that a new round of testing, initiated by July 18 letters requesting consent to enter properties in the area, will return similar – and safe – results.

Several town officials are still wary.

"When the town was putting in the sewer down in that area, there was a problem as well," said Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "They did some soil remediation and further some groundwater remediation back in 1998. The DEP had told Mr. Scarpino that he had to proceed with the clean-up of the property. He pleaded that he didn't have the financial wherewithal and it kind of died on the vine."

About a year ago, Godzik began receiving complaints about the odor of gasoline and took water samples from the retention pool at St. Anthony's. That sample revealed trace amounts of MBTE and benzene. Both are components of gasoline and both are carcinogens.

"The numbers were very low, but they were there," said Godzik. "Based on that the town, the Board of Health, the Conservation Commission, town manager, and selectmen wrote letters to the DEP asking them to come back and revisit the site."

Town Manager Mark W. Haddad is pleased the DEP is going to reinvestigate the area.

"Now the DEP has notified me that they are going to take a look at it, so things should start progressing nicely," said Haddad.

A major issue for the town is determining the potential for the contamination to infiltrate the groundwater as the rehabilitation of the nearby Ellms Meadow well progresses. The well would be used in emergency situations.

"I think everybody wants to get this site cleaned up because of the potential of affecting residents and the water supply," said Godzik. "If there is still some source of contamination, we'd like to see that cleaned up."

Ballet helped set stage for NYU

Sullivan 'retires' from professional world of dance

By Tim Llewellyn

Corey Sullivan, who graduated from CHS in June, is trading the spotlight of the ballet stage for college and a possible future in politics.

Up to this point it is safe to say Corey Sullivan's life has been defined by dance. Starting ballet at the tender age of three, this Cohasset High graduate has worked her way through the ranks of the dance community. Enrolling at the Boston Ballet Center for Dance Education in 1993, Sullivan has earned her standing in the most intense level that the center has to offer. She has also performed many professional roles with the renowned Boston Ballet company.

But for a student with such an extensive list of dance accomplishments, her academic and extracurricular activities are staggering. From a four-year high honors student, to a student council representative, to a teacher's assistant, to a school committee student liaison, Sullivan has done it all.

And now she plans to take the lessons that she has learned in the studios of the Boston Ballet Center and the halls of CHS with her to New York, where she will be starting at New York University in the fall.

Is she worried?

"Ballet has really made me comfortable in the city atmosphere, with a diverse group of people. I learned a lot of the things that can be applied to life beyond dance," Sullivan said.

And that is exactly what she will be doing at NYU, moving beyond dance to concentrate on other pursuits. But while she is stepping out of the world of professional dance, she is by no means slowing down. Sullivan plans to pursue a major in international politics, or perhaps go the pre-law route.

These political aspirations are not too far a field for Sullivan, because what was this professional dancer doing when she wasn't busy making high honors? She was working at the Statehouse for local Rep. Garrett Bradley, of course. This hands-on experience, combined with two years of the Presidential Classroom, a week-long program that gives a behind the scenes look at the political workings of Washington D.C., has piqued Sullivan's interest. And as she walking away from the spotlight of the stage, perhaps she will find her feet in the spotlight of a larger arena, politics.

Leaving professional dance was an enormous decision for Sullivan to make, but she is confident that she made the right choice. Because, she explained, most of the best dancers go straight from high school into full-time professional dance — and college is not an experience that she was willing to miss. But, she has no doubt that hanging up her shoes will be a difficult step to take.

"It will be interesting to see how much I miss it," Sullivan said.

Tricky corner may not be west but it's wild fusion thankfully reaches its end in a bridge across Straits Pond where the Hull town line intervenes and gives cross-road neighbors the right to pay taxes to the same municipality.

Perhaps in direct response to its physical composition, West Corner is also a neighborhood divided.

Recently, DiNero's restaurant, located in West Corner – and for the record in Cohasset – applied for relief from the Zoning Board of Appeals in order to expand (the ZBA continued the hearing to Aug. 12). And the Greek Church just around the corner on Jerusalem Road is planning a community center.

"You have three towns meeting and you've got the beach on top of that. It really is insane."

— Casey Fredette, who works at Tedeschi's

The ensuing recent brouhaha of public opinion – both for and against DiNero's expansion – is indicative of a larger issue.

"My dog used to run down the street and steal pizza from Lokies (restaurant on the site of DiNero's)," said James Reichardt of 3 Grace Drive who grew up on the Hingham side of Hull Street. "(The owner) used to cool them (pizzas) off on a table outside, behind the restaurant, several hundred feet away on the Cohasset side. Nowadays, you couldn't let a dog go 100 feet away."

With Hull Street one of only three roads leading into Hull, the neighborhood has always experienced high volume, especially on the weekends in the summer months. Though most of the development has avoided the Corner specifically — projects in Hull, from Paragon Park, to apartment complexes, to Nantasket Beach have always drawn large crowds.

Some residents have complained of extraordinary wait times to cross the intersection. But a 1997 study by Sam Park Associates of Boston completed for the 162-unit Avalon Estates development in Hull rated the general area around that development in the B to C range, depending on the time of day (A is little or no traffic, F is long delays).

Still, most agree that the area is busy.

"People can't get in and out," said Pamela Tutty, who works at Victoria's sub shop, one of several businesses in the Corner. "Especially in the morning when you have the traffic going to the beach, people can't get in and out here, Tedeschi's, DeNiro's, anywhere."

Tutty, however, doesn't blame it on recent development.

"It's always been like that," she continued. "It's the beach. You can't just blame it on Avalon Estates. It's been like that since they had Paragon Park and even after they got rid of Paragon Park.."

Maria Plante, of 798 Jerusalem Road is against DiNero's expansion.

"It's always been a steady stream of traffic, which we knew when we built here," said Plante. "Traffic for Nantasket, traffic for the stores. What I don't want is any more traffic, we've had enough. You have to go back to the premise, that is a residential area."

DiNero's is, however, zoned for business and some customers feel they deserve the right to expand.

"They're the best neighbor around here, really," said Frank McWilliams of Hull who has lived in the area for 60 years. "They don't treat anyone badly. I've been coming here for, well a long time and I've never had a problem with the traffic. It's all in someone's head."

Frank A. Plotner, proprietor of DiNero's feels that the developments haven't made a noticeable impact.

"It really hasn't changed that much in the seven years I've been here," said Plotner

Cohasset Police Chief Robert Jackson has seen the area flex and breathe over time.

"It's a trade off," said Jackson. "When Paragon Park left there was a decrease in traffic. Now with more development and commuters, traffic has increased but it is not an unmanageable increase in the traffic load. West Corner is not a major headache."

Reichardt, who spends his mornings trying to get on to Route 228 just south of the square, disagrees.

"The congestion has really grown. I couldn't even throw out a figure," Reichardt said. "It's built up pretty well on the Cohasset side especially."

Reichardt did admit that the area has always been busy to some extent.

"In the summer months, with people traveling to Nantasket or taking a pleasure cruise down Jerusalem Road, it was always fairly busy," said Reichart. "Especially during weekends, but midweek it would be pretty quiet here. It just seems steadier now."

Selectman Merle Brown has also seen the increase in congestion.

"There's more traffic now," said Brown. "Except in the summers when Paragon Park was open, there was a lot of traffic. Avalon Estates has gone into Hull and there are more people living in Hull now. Now traffic is year round. When I was growing up, not that many people had cars, and those that did only had one car in a family."

Town Planner Liz Harrington painted the area as a study in contrasts.

"You've got two very busy streets feeding into an intersection with just stop signs," said Harrington. "On one hand it's great. It's the neighborhood shopping center. There are businesses that have been there for a long, long time, which I think is a real plus. Someone can walk to get a gallon of milk, or walk to get a bite to eat, but I would be interested to see what the impact of the Avalon project is."

A formal town investigation, however, is not in the works.

"It's not something that we have taken a close look at, as far as the traffic," said Harrington. "It hasn't really been on the radar, but maybe it is some thing that is percolating up."

Perhaps with the best view in the house, Casey Fredette of Hingham, who mans the counter at Tedeschi's gave his perspective on the situation..

"This place is insane," as he motioned to several customers leaving the store. "It's like that, all the time, but usually 30 of them. In all the time I've worked, here, it's always been busy. This corner is nuts, everyone is in and out."

Fredette, however, doesn't think that there is much anyone can do about it..

"Victoria's is a lot busier, and we've certainly gotten busier, but it's always been busy here," said Fredette. "You have three towns meeting and you've got the beach on top of that. It really is insane."

STAFF PHOTO/SUSAN HANEY

Some residents who live near West Corner are concerned about plans to expand DiNero's, a popular dining spot. The Zoning Board of Appeals will take the matter up again on Aug. 12. The restaurant is part of the mix at the busy corner where Hull, Hingham and Cohasset meet.

The need for more affordable housing

Chapter 40B – the state's affordable housing law – is taking on the chin from all sides. Groups in Cohasset, Marshfield and Duxbury, to name a few, are gathering steam to force changes in the 30-year-old legislation that allows developers to skirt some zoning regulations in exchange for providing a percentage of the project as affordable housing.

We can't argue with the need to amend the law, something which the legislature is addressing.

No one who has empty acreage in their single-family neighborhood wants to see high-density apartments or condos go in down the street. Those homeowners bought their homes because they liked the area and should have some assurances that their neighborhood zoning is secure.

A town should also be able to keep existing commercial and industrial zoning intact in the hope of attracting business and increasing the commercial tax base.

However, with that being said, no one should lose sight of the need to provide affordable housing. It's important to remember that "affordable" is not the same thing as "government" housing that can conjure up images of undesirable inner-city apartment buildings.

The "affordability" factor for 40B projects means the units must be affordable for households earning no more than 80 percent of the greater Boston median income or about $58,000 a year.

And in the type of 40B projects being proposed, the affordable units are identical in every way to the market-priced or market-rate ones (in the case of apartments).

Last week in Hingham, the housing authority conducted a lottery for the six affordable townhouses in a 24-unit 40B project called Whiting Lane on Whiting Street (Route 53). More than 250 individuals and families submitted applications for the two-bedroom units priced at $104,000. Upwards of 400 took out applications, many weren't returned because the potential applicants didn't meet the eligibility criteria.

The sheer number of homeowner-hopefuls is indicative of the need to provide affordable housing in our towns. While it's easy to say, towns should be able to provide affordable housing themselves, we all know towns don't make particularly good landlords. And we have to ask ourselves, why most towns have done little to encourage affordable housing over the years. That's why they find themselves fighting 40B projects today. The law makes municipalities that have less than 10 percent of their housing stock as affordable by state standards vulnerable to the law.

At the lottery in Hingham, Selectmen Chairman Mathew MacIver put it best.

He said despite the debate over the pros and cons of 40B, the goal of providing affordable housing is to give people and families a break so they can establish themselves in a community that otherwise might not be possible.

GREENBUSH QUESTION OF THE WEEK

'Where will the tunnel start?'

Coming from Weymouth, the "boat section" of the Hingham tunnel will start about 200 feet south of the Torrent Fire Station along the right of way and continue for about 1100 feet to the portal or underground entrance about parallel to Talbots in the square. The underground section will be about 800 feet, emerging past the Hingham Square Barbershop just on the other side of South Street where the other, approximately 1000-foot boat section begins. The train will reach grade-level again about 250 feet before Water Street or about the middle of the Station Street parking lot. At its deepest point under Main Street, the underground portion of the tunnel will be about 26 feet deep from the top of rail to grade.

If you have a Greenbush construction question that others may be interested in, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com. The Mariner will ask Tom Carroll, Greenbush community liaison with Cashman-Balfour Beatty for the answer. You may also call the Greenbush hotline at 781-682-6350.

The Law of Inverse Proportions:

Running out of propane the night you grill butterflied lamb for the house guests

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Who's in charge?

TO THE EDITOR:

The veneer separating CRC from Peter Roy and Peter Roy's business interests became transparent at the July 9, Selectmen's meeting. At this meeting, Dean Rizzo presented the "moderate" CRC proposal. When a question asking Selectmen to evaluate the cost/benefit of widening Border Street (which requires land taking) for the sole purpose of preserving seven street parking spots was raised, response from Peter Roy was that if those parking spots were eliminated he "would sue the town."

Citizens of Cohasset should be offended. Is this the real cost of "free" planning? Who will ensure that the best interests of the town prevail in every aspect of the "revitalization" plan? Will a separate committee be established to analyze cost/benefit of the major components of the plan? Who will make certain that the design maintains the historic feel of an Old New England Fishing Harbor and Victorian Landscape? Can we be assured the final plan is subject to a town vote? Who will make certain that the concerns of the harbor residents: quality of parking, noise, congestion and lighting are incorporated into the final plan?

We can only hope that the best interests of all Cohasset residents prevail, free from manipulation of the process.

40B and the ZBA

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Zoning Board of Appeals, I'd like to correct a serious misconception that seems to exist within the anti-40B group, per the report in last week's Mariner. Mike Westcott was quoted as saying "it's unfortunate that town management, many on the Board of Selectmen and Zoning Board of Appeals are doing little to fight this "[i.e. 40B, "affordable housing" proposals].

Certainly that is true of the ZBA, as it should and must be. Let me explain. State law empowers Zoning Boards "to promote the health, safety, and general welfare" of a town's inhabitants. ZBAs are quasi-judicial bodies, operating within the confines of local zoning bylaws, state statutes, and case law. ZBAs are given some, albeit limited, discretion in interpreting these laws — but always subject to state review, usually via the courts. This point is important — a Board of Appeals must not disregard or obstruct the law, nor does it make laws — its job is to apply and uphold them.

Chapter 40B is a State law that supercedes most local bylaws including those of lot area, density, open space, setbacks, bulk and height of structures, parking, and lot coverage. It also considers local concerns about burdens placed on a school system, police and fire department staffing, etc. to be largely irrelevant. It does allow a ZBA reasonable discretion where basic health, safety, and environmental issues are of concern, but 40B also mandates that Zoning Boards proceed expeditiously, and that they not impose conditions that would make projects "uneconomic". Failure to "play by the rules" comes with a great cost — a developer may appeal, not to the courts but to a division of the Dept. of Housing & Community Development (the Housing Appeals Committee) which almost always sides with the developer. If the HAC finds in favor of the developer, usually all local review/oversight ceases — the project becomes state-directed.

Therefore from both statutory and practical standpoints, a ZBA could do its town great harm were it to "fight" 40B proposals; the better solution is to work with developers to see if projects can be made harmonious with a town's character and needs. If a project turns out to be clearly inimical to Cohasset's "health, safety, and environment" then this Board will stand fast, but pre-judgment is not helpful at this point. Certainly, Chapter 40B is imperfect, as might be expected of a 33-year-old law. But the way to proceed is to amend this law to bring greater control back to towns ….and on that point, this Zoning Board has no disagreement with Mike Westcott.

HEALTH NOTES

No trash barrels, less litter?

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

For, me, the character of a town can be measured by the care with which houses and public spaces are maintained. It seems to me that this is seldom accomplished by a few individuals, but by a groundswell of common municipal pride. If one visits Charleston, S.C., one immediately understands. Surely , there are advocacy groups, both citizens and business, perhaps one of the most important of which may be the Chamber of Commerce. But there are Chambers in every city, and advocacy groups hoping to improve neighborhoods and districts, etc.

But if a group tries to improve things in the town and there is a lukewarm response, we've painted an unprimed plank. I vainly seek our unified sense of pride in Cohasset. There's a recognition, in some circles, that we're perhaps better than neighboring south shore towns except for, maybe, a select few. But how many of us feels the sense that we respect our town and would care for its unique character?

Well, I have a test; a test of our pride and uniqueness —trash barrels — that's it, trash barrels!

People either pick up their trash sans barrels, or they litter with abandon, showing they don't care very much.

For years, we've been putting trash barrels in our public places. Carl Sestito, our new DPW head, says the tides of trash come and go, probably with the vagaries of the business cycle. But we hear of other municipalities which have dispensed with barrels altogether. It's the new rage in National Parks. Sometimes it works and sometimes it doesn't. People either pick up their trash sans barrels, or they litter with abandon, showing they don't care very much. My take is that this reflects on the pride in the surroundings. I've seen heedless kids throw wrappers, but when reminded, reflect shame for forgetting an early lesson. But what do we have when we get television sets at Sandy Beach or propane tanks at the Beechwood baseball field? It's easy to surround these things with a blue bag and take them to the RTF, and for a dollar, you'll still be violating the spirit of the recycling rules, but not the letter.

So, there we have it. The Board will investigate removal of barrels at one town location and see what happens. If as is hoped, we see less litter, we may expand the plan to other areas.

We will continue to check with Carl, and talk to trash collectors we occasionally see in our browsing, and we'll let you know if things improve.

Conservation commissions take stand against MBTA power grab

GREENBUSH VIEW

JOHN BEWICK

Several months ago the Hingham Conservation Commission, and subsequently the Cohasset and Scituate Conservation Commissions, rejected the MBTA's application for a wetlands permit for the Greenbush rail restoration. The reasons were two-fold: first, the project exceeded a statutory limit of 32,000 square feet of bordering vegetated wetlands and second, because of a lack of information required to approve and issue Orders of Conditions.

Regarding the first point, the rejections were expected by the MBTA given that a denial was required by statute.

What the MBTA apparently did not expect and quickly and strongly denied was the request that more information be given to the conservation commissions. The MBTA's position is that it need only "...provide sufficient information for the Commission to render a decision." This seeming fine point is now the center of a major battle waging at the Department of Environmental Protection(DEP) between the MBTA, the Hingham/Cohasset/Scituate Conservation Commissions and recently the statewide Massachusetts Association of Conservation Commissions, which has written the DEP supporting our local Conservation Commissions (CC's).

What is this battle all about and why is it important?

At stake is the very power of the local Conservation Commission to do its job.

Under the Wetlands Protection Act, local CC's are charged with the review of permit applications. This process was designed by the Legislature for the purpose of enabling local conservation knowledge to play an important role in helping to shape the mitigation for projects affecting a community. When one considers the many potentially severe and unknown environmental problems posed by Greenbush construction, this mandate is no small matter. In taking it's vigorous stand, the HCC's states that its goal is not to oppose Greenbush, rather it is to obtain sufficient information to describe impacts and mitigation in order to protect the local environment.

If the MBTA has its way it would transfer these powers to the DEP where it presumes to find a more malleable reviewer given the cursory review and approval of the Final Environmental Impact Report more than a year ago.

In a brilliantly argued letter, Joe Fisher, the Chairman of the Hingham Conservation Commission, charges that the MBTA position fundamentally undermines commission authority under the Wetlands Protection Act. Fisher's argument was so compelling that the Massachusetts Association of Conservation Commissions (MACC) joined the fray. In a letter to the DEP supporting Fisher's case and aimed at protecting the very essence of the commission's powers, Patrick Garner, vice president of the MACC argued that "The MBTA approach is the antithesis of allowing local participation."

So what is at stake here is the MBTA's cherished notion that Greenbush is a "done deal."

As a former Secretary of Environmental Affairs for the Commonwealth and a strong supporter of the type of environmental legislation that is at the heart of this issue, I couldn't agree more and I strongly endorse the position adopted by the HCC and the MACC.

Fisher has further incurred the wrath of the MBTA by contending that the problem is exacerbated by the "design/build" factor. With much of Greenbush un-designed, it would be nearly impossible for local CCs to do their job. Fisher further claims that the MBTA is not bound by state legislation to use design/build to build Greenbush as the MBTA claims. He cites the exact legislative wording to support his point. The problems raised about timely information to CC's reinforces the fact that the design/build concept was never intended for a project as environmentally complex as Greenbush.

If the MBTA were to do it right it would first go to the DEP to ask for a variance to the Wetlands Act for the project as a whole. If the DEP grants such a variance, then the MBTA would go back to the local Conservation Commissions after design is completed, and ask for an Order of Conditions with an application that contains complete information, just as they would with any other project.

Why might the MBTA be hesitant to use this approach?

The request for a variance could trigger a request for an adjudicatory hearing by qualified persons with the DEP Commissioner in which the MBTA would have to demonstrate that there is an overwhelming public interest and that there are no alternatives that would satisfy the requirements of the project. Under the umbrella of responsible and unbiased expert testimony this would be difficult to prove given the fact that expansion of commuter boats and express buses could offer more frequent service, attract more new riders, cost far less and be far less environmentally invasive. Other elements of the variance could be subject to judicial review as well. Such challenges could add years to the process.

So what is at stake here is the MBTA's cherished notion that Greenbush is a "done deal."

But, as Fisher is quick to point out in his letter to the DEP, this is not about Greenbush opposition. Rather this battle is over gutting of the Wetlands Protection Act and preserving the powers of local conservation commissions to make the fundamental decisions about protection of local wetlands and other values. As such it is a statewide battle that far surpasses Greenbush in its potential impacts. That is why the MACC has joined the battle to preserve 25 years of progress in protecting our environment.

It is not lost on those of us who have long opposed the project that the HCC efforts to protect our environment are consistent with ours: to provide the best transportation solution for the South Shore with minimal impact on the environment. To this end I encourage all citizens of good conscience to support the conservation commissions of Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate in what could well be a long and protracted battle with the MBTA to preserve and protect the Conservation Commission mandate.

John Bewick is a former Secretary of Environmental Affairs for the Commonwealth and president of Advocates for Transportation Alternatives, a Hingham-based advocacy group promoting alternatives to the Greenbush rail restoration.

Victims of fatty foods

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I think I'll sue somebody. It doesn't matter who, just as long as whoever it is has a lot of money.

In fact, I think I'll sue the restaurant that forced me to eat that piece of strawberry shortcake. If they had checked my file at the South Shore Hospital, they would have found I am allergic to strawberries. Oh, the tortures they put me through!

The idea came to me the other day when I read that Caesar Barber and 10 other fatties are suing McDonald's, Burger King, Wendy's, and Kentucky Fried Chicken for failing to inform them that too much fatty food, like French fries and 'burgers and fried chicken, can lead to obesity, which can lead to heart attacks, dandruff, and hangnails.

"These people need to be compensated," said their lawyer, Samuel Hirsch, for the medications and the doctors' appointments that have been forced on them by the insensitive fast-food folks. "The industry fails to post the contents of the food aggressively, in a conspicuous place, and they have created a craving, an addiction in these people."

Barber, the lead plaintiff in the class action suit, claims he eats in a fast food restaurant four or five times a week and, as a result, has had two heart attacks, high blood pressure, diabetes, and high cholesterol, all attributed to his obesity.

"There was no fast food I didn't eat," he said, "and I ate it more than not because I was single . . .

(Which could lead to a suit against NOW, for withholding women from him.)

". . . it was quick and I'm not a very good cook."

(Does anyone see a suit coming against Julia Child or Emeril Lagasse for their failure to teach him in time ?)

Katharine Kim, spokeswoman for the National Restaurant Association, calls the suit "frivolous, senseless, baseless, and ridiculous," but don't bet your Big Mac on it.

Remember the woman who sued McDonald's for spilling hot coffee on herself and won a seven figure settlement?

Remember Carolyn Humphrey, the California woman who was chronically late for work because she spent three hours primping for the job? The court ruled that was a disability.

Incidentally, the court in that case was the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth District, the same one that ruled "under God" out of the Pledge of Allegiance. But I digress . . .

Lawsuits filed in American courts get loonier and loonier, and the loonies are winning often enough so that a manufacturer of baby carriages felt it necessary to warn purchasers of a stroller to "remove child before folding."

Even a warning label can be no proof against lawsuits, as Sea World of Orlando, Fla., found out when the estate of Daniel Dukes sued them for negligence.

Seems Dukes sneaked into the park after hours and dove into a tank with an exhibit named Tillikum. His body was found the next day.

The suit claimed Sea World was negligent in not warning Dukes that Tillikum was dangerous even though the sign said he was a "killer whale."

So, if any of you folks have a problem with strawberries, maybe we can get together on a class action suit.

Logan expansion will add to emissions pollution

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANNE FRYE

Aviation pollution is growing fast. It significantly impacts air and water, public health and climate change. It mixes with pollution from other sources. Atmospheric and health researchers worldwide are watching it; the reach of the problem will finally break on the public as a scandal. Locally, Massport's expansion of Logan Airport will increase emissions pollution and noise unacceptably on the South Shore and much of Greater Boston. Massport's contrary environmental claims are widely mistrusted, and Acting Governor Swift just took funding for a Logan health effects study out of the state budget!

Americans overwhelmingly want someone to single-mindedly protect air and water quality.

This week the Federal Aviation Administration will specify conditions for expansion of Logan Airport, in a "Record of Decision," after its review of Massport's Final Environmental Impact Statement. It sounds momentous, but the FAA's decision to approve expansion in some form was never much in doubt.

Opponents of Logan expansion met with the departing FAA Administrator, Jane Garvey, a few weeks ago, in an eleventh-hour session. As a former pilot myself, I took away the impression that she was professionally deeply dedicated to aviation security, flight safety and air traffic control, just what a pilot expects of the FAA. Americans overwhelmingly want someone to single-mindedly pursue safety in planes and airports.

The South Shore and other Greater Boston communities need protection and relief from the impacts of Massport's expansion. If we don't get it from the FAA, we must get it through the courts, new leadership and legislation. Please take a deep breath, and join the campaign!

Unhappy politicians aren't the real losers

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending July 26.

Reporters tend to be happiest professionally when everyone else is most miserable. Though a lot of politicians might argue this is because reporters by and large are cretins, it's actually because misery is news. And there was a lot of news at the Statehouse last week.

Pretty much all the politicians were unhappy. They could choose the losing side, and cast ineffectual votes to support Acting Gov. Jane Swift's veto of a $1.14 billion tax hike. Or they could join a winning side on which no one's a winner – the large majority in both chambers that voted in favor of the tax hike, which took effect when the Senate overrode the veto July 25.

The reps and senators most in favor of raising taxes were the ones most demoralized by the cuts in spending that had to take place — even with those tax hikes. The governor spent last week looking for even more places to cut — hundreds of millions of dollars more.

The politicians were the lucky ones. The real losers were the people who now may lose their health care coverage, or their home care or day care services, to name a few. Painful details of the damage done to state services, even after tax hikes, even after revenue maneuvers, kept making themselves apparent all week.

As the fundamentals of the budget were examined, it became very clear that the immediate future of running Massachusetts is about how the economy performs.

The Legislature and administration are out of one-time gimmicks. They spent $800 million in reserve funds in this budget, not to mention the entire $300 million tobacco settlement payment for this year. The middle class took the brunt of tax hikes this year, the poor and working poor the brunt of the spending cuts. With reserve funds basically gone, the next round of cuts will hit the middle class as well — education and health care, state parks and public safety.

Unless revenues come back. If the economy rebounds, if businesses and individuals start making more money, they'll pay more taxes on those earnings into the state treasury, even if tax rates stay the same. That's why tax rates went down, but receipts went up, in the 1990s.

But: few were predicting such a rebound last week. Much of the sudden collapse in revenue came in the area of capital gains – i.e., sales of stock and other securities. When the stock market goes down, when faith in the economy is diminished, capital gains receipts and other revenues fall off. You may have noticed that neither the market nor confidence in corporate America is going up. That led House Ways and Means Chairman John Rogers to tell reporters: "Everything's back on the table next year" – basically a proclamation that the crisis has not been ended and even more tax hikes and program cuts could be coming.

Painful details of the damage done to state services, even after tax hikes, even after revenue maneuvers, kept making themselves apparent all week.

Those are words that could make even Statehouse reporters, brimming with good copy though they may be, unhappy like everyone else. After all, they pay taxes too.

With formal legislative sessions ending and the governor's race ongoing, it was easy to find stories to write and talk about last week.

• The Republican candidate for governor caught everyone in the political world off guard by endorsing a policy long held dear by liberal Democrats: tying the state's minimum wage to the inflation rate. Romney said that would help businesses plan for labor costs more intelligently.

• Research groups started putting this year's Massachusetts budget numbers in context. The National Conference of State Legislatures found the Bay State tax hike to be the third highest of those passed by states that have chosen to raise taxes this year. Massachusetts enacted the biggest increase in the personal income tax, NCSL found.

• The Senate did most of its debating on amendments to the bill behind closed doors, then passed the bill 36-0. Now issues such as a House provision making it easier for the MBTA to raise fares will be settled between the branches – or not – in the last three or four working days of formal sessions. The Senate did not address House bond riders creating a Massport advisory board or expanding the state turnpike board.

• A measure making changes in the structure of the state's bilingual education program — but not enough to stop a bilingual ban referendum from heading for the ballot – cleared the Senate easily. The vote was 37-1 after lengthy debate. The House and Senate are likely to work out minor differences this week and send an overhaul of the 30-year-old bilingual law to Swift's desk. Then the campaign begins. Ballot question sponsors will argue the new law doesn't do enough to force students to learn English. Its opponents will argue the law lays out meaningful reforms and that the ballot proposal is too rigid.

• About 64 percent of men in Massachusetts are overweight or obese, along with 42 percent of women, the Department of Public Health (DPH) reported. Obesity is said to cause 600,000 premature deaths a year nationwide, and the number of overweight Bay Staters rose 29 percent in the 1990s, the DPH said.

• Though the federal government made Big Dig managers add more than $200 million to the expense side of the project's accounting, the turnpike authority claimed the project's bottom line hadn't increased, marking its first year of no overruns. Work started in 1991. The estimated cost is now $14.625 billion. Big Dig officials made it clear the price tag counts on spending all contingency funds. Project officials also officially pushed back by six weeks four key milestone dates, including its "substantial completion" estimate, which is now early February, 2005.

• The House passed measures establishing new crimes with specific penalties for acts like making an anthrax hoax, making terrorist threats over the Internet or possessing weapons of mass destruction. An amendment approved by the House would stipulate that Bay State driver's licenses held by foreigners would expire the same day their visas do. Lawmakers hope to send the first package of post-September 11 anti-terrorism policy changes to Swift's desk next week.

• A result of the tragic April 2001 Newton charter-bus crash, legislation requiring school committees to set up regulations for overnight trips passed both branches and arrived on the governor's desk. The bill is aimed at encouraging an extra degree of caution among local educators considering how to run outings such as the band trip in which four students died.

• The conservative think tank at Suffolk University released a report saying recent student improvements on the MCAS were not correlated with lower class sizes and higher teacher pay. The institute has long been skeptical of the notion that spending increases quality. Teacher's unions echoed education commissioner David Driscoll comment that the report "doesn't make much sense." Driscoll didn't specify why not.

• This could have been just what Tom Finneran was worried about. Clean Elections gubernatorial candidate Warren Tolman showed how he'll spend some of the proceeds from the court-ordered auction of Lottery vehicles and public land in Lakeville to fund his campaign: an ad calling the House Speaker "Boss Finneran" and telling voters he's a "symbol of what's wrong with Massachusetts." The speaker's office had no (public) reaction.

Most surveyed don't want harbor upgrade effort sunk including those on Border, Margin, Summer, Stockbridge streets, Elm Street (to Stephen's Lane), Elm Court, Blackhorse lane and Sankey Road. Nearly two-thirds or 76 of harbor area households and businesses that responded agree the area could use "moderate" improvements.

Another 192 surveys were mailed to miscellaneous residents including town officials, CRC town liaisons, residents who attended past harbor workshops and/or expressed an interest in the harbor project, and individuals who have provided financial support to CRC's efforts.

Of the total 384 surveys mailed, 158 or 41 percent were returned, Rizzo said. Of that 72 percent preferred the "moderate" improvement approach. The other two options were "minimum" improvements (18 percent) or "no" improvements (9 percent).

The "moderate" approach includes sidewalk improvements that involve widening them as necessary and installing granite curbing to separate the sidewalk from parallel parking, installation of a new wood or steel railing system, tree planting and new lighting as appropriate.

Project cost estimates are about $1.1 million with the potential for grants to absorb 90 percent, leaving about $113,000. The town could change the scope of the project if grant money did not materialize, Rizzo said.

A copy of all survey responses and written comments are available at the selectmen's office at Town Hall and CRC office on Elm Street.

The results are broken down in great detail that includes how respondents on each street in the harbor area feel about types of lighting and railing materials.

The survey also includes letters from the Design Review Board, Planning Board, Recreation Commission, Government Island Study Committee, Cohasset Historical Commission, Sailing Club and Lightkeepers Corporation. The Conservation Commission and DPW superintendent also responded by completing the survey.

In addition to the general question as to which improvement approach was preferred, residents were asked to give their opinion of various other specific design changes in the area.

For example, a majority of respondents favor moving the sidewalk on the Border Street bridge to the opposite side of the road to create a continuous sidewalk on the same side of the Border Street entrance to Government Island. A majority of respondents also support the need to create a safer intersection where Border and Summer streets intersect in front of the American Legion.

A public workshop will be scheduled in early fall to review the plans and ideas prior to submitting grant applications.

Rizzo said the CRC is in the process of putting together three-to-four railing design options for the selectmen and community to consider.

"Images of the railing options will be incorporated into actual pictures of the harbor area to give people a real sense of what they will look like," he said. CRC will also continue with grant research and the application processes in order to determine the definitive funding assistance available to help the town pay for the proposed improvements.

A public workshop will be scheduled in early fall to review the plans and ideas prior to submitting grant applications, Rizzo said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the selectmen will oversee any harbor plans. The board will set aside time on an upcoming agenda to discuss the survey and future of the project that could include hiring a consultant and going to Town Meeting for funds.

"The consensus they reached three weeks ago, is that something needs to be done at the harbor for safety reasons," Haddad said.

Cemetery to take its place in history

Many of the town's early settlers are buried in Cohasset Central Cemetery, which is being considered for listing on the National Register.

art, the glacial moraines, and its slate, marble and granite markers — the cemetery's "inhabitants" are a lesson in history unto themselves.

Montague points out that Central Cemetery has importance for all three.

"Cemeteries tell stories," she says.

"We have William Hanlon (of the Hanlon Brothers, world-famous acrobats of the late 19th century), a Civil War Medal of Honor winner, and the Celtic cross," Montague says. The Celtic cross marks the mass grave of 45 unidentified victims who perished aboard the Brig "St. John" in 1949 off the Cohasset coast.

The 19th-century tragedian, Lawrence Barrett, and friend of fellow actor Edwin Booth, is buried there near other members of Cohasset's "Actor's Row," who had homes at the harbor. Richardson White, a prizewinning sculptor and farmer, and the Rev. Nehemiah Hobart, the town's first clergyman, also rest there.

Images depicted on the cemetery gravestones show how views of death have evolved over the past three centuries.

"We can trace the faiths that have inspired the carvers and their customers, beliefs that are still extant on the stones and which give us a window into the past and perhaps into the mind of the folk that once lived on the seacoast of New England," the application states.

Last summer, about 30 members of the Association for Gravestone Studies toured the cemetery.

Vince Luti, who led the group, pointed out during the tour religious attitudes are not the only thing that can be learned from cemetery studies but also the iconography, life span and epitaphs can reveal much about the area's demographic and medical history.

As the tour discovered, and as have many Cohasseters, Central Cemetery is also a nice place to take a stroll, sit and reflect, and enjoy the scenery.

"The peaceful setting and its accessibility to the town Village draw visitors and recreational walkers through all seasons," the application for the National Register states. "The vista of Little Harbor and the Atlantic Ocean beyond speaks to the seafaring history of Cohasset."

Besides the recognition that goes with being named to the National Register, the designation also provides some protection, particularly from federal projects.

"This will preserve the cemetery indefinitely," Montague says. "No one can turn it into another function."

Montague explained that Central Cemetery is owned and maintained by a private organization made up of all the plot owners. A sub-committee of the cemetery board is in the process of documenting all the gravesites to provide a genealogical record of the town's early citizens.

She explained the idea to apply for the National Register — a process that took about18 months — stemmed from a small mention in a report by consultants for the MBTA that surveyed historic sites along the Greenbush line. A line in the report, discovered by Wadsworth, the town archivist, stated the cemetery, ought to be listed.

Other properties in Cohasset on the National Register are the Cohasset Common Historic District, Government Island, the Caleb Lothrop House on Summer Street and the Walter Gropius House off Atlantic Avenue. The Cohasset Historical Society is in the process of applying for its two museums, the John Wilson House and Maritime Museum, for inclusion on the National Register.

There are about 75,000 listings that make up the National Register.

to name a few.

Environmental officials know pollutants come through storm drains because of high bacteria counts in waterways following heavy rainfall, Stanton says.

The grant, awarded by the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, is part of the Massachusetts Watershed Initiative Project, and provides money to create a storm-drain mapping model that can be used in other South Shore communities.

"What is significant about this project is the EPA (Environmental Protection Agency) will be requiring towns to map storm drains at their expense once their regulations become effective next March," says George Zoto, team leader for the South Coastal Watershed for the Massachusetts Watershed Initiative. Municipalities across the country are required to address water pollution under the federal Clean Water Act.

Due to negative effects of untreated storm water in the nation's waterways, the EPA has implemented a new storm-water management program targeting smaller municipalities and requires them to meet certain thresholds to create a comprehensive storm-water management plan. The new program follows an earlier EPA program that focused on storm-water pollution from medium- to large- municipal separate storm sewer systems, industrial sources and large construction sites.

Zoto explains that over time, towns installed storm drains to "do whatever they could to get the water out."

But as blacktop areas increased, storm drains — and the fact the water didn't percolate back into the ground which filtered it the way Mother Nature intended — have negatively affected the watershed have become leading causes of pollution.

According to the grant application, the EPA requires towns develop a storm-sewer system map that shows major pipes, outfalls and topography. This project allows Cohasset to meet this requirement and sets the stage for Norwell and Scituate to comply.

"At this time, there are no formal maps in Cohasset that detail storm-drain system information; it all resides in the heads of the DPW staff that have been working in the town for years," the grant application stated.

The mapping will enable the town to develop a plan to mitigate problem storm drains through treatment systems and filtration and become part of the town's storm-water management plan.

However, mapping some 900 storm drains in Cohasset is not an easy task and could cost considerably more than the grant money allotted. But thanks to high school intern, Greg O'Brien, who has been hired to help with the project, and a high-tech device called a GPS (global positioning unit), Cohasset may be able to get the job done without going to the taxpayers for more money, says Steve Bobo, chairman of the Board of Health.

The GPS bounces a signal to a satellite which captures the coordinates and sends the information back to the unit. The information can then be identified and mapped according to GIS (Geographic Information Systems) computer technology. Bobo says this project should dovetail with work being done by consultants hired by the Water Department to help with the watershed protection plan.

The Water Department will match the funds the town will spend on the project, says John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

"Storm drain mapping is important to be able to design controls on storm-water runoff, which is a major contributor to non-point source pollution of water bodies and the water supply," McNabb says.

says.

The first task is to dig up any data on catch basins in town. Most of the documented drains are in larger, more recent developments, such as Shaw's Plaza and the Rose Hill subdivision. Then Greg will work with the DPW, which cleans the catch basins, to find all the rest.

Greg plans to go out with the DPW to each catch basin and expects to tackle 20-30 drains a day. Using a hand-held GPS (Global Positioning System) device, Greg will be able to get the exact coordinates of each drain. He'll also go inside to try to get a measurement on the pipes.

Greg will take all the information and feed it into a computer to develop the data base and mapping – all of which will become part of the town's Storm Water Management Plan that will include how to mitigate problem drains. He may also tackle writing the plan as part of an independent study at CMHS this coming year.

The 17-year-old high school senior was recommended for the job by a small company in Scituate that he did some research for. He is paid about $8 an hour which is covered by a state grant recently awarded to Cohasset (see related story).

At first the new job scared him a bit but soon, Greg realized he could make a difference and learn a lot.

"In the first week, I had 100 people's names and phone numbers," he says. "Paper is stacking up around me."

Shipyard plans are shaping up

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Ground could be broken for the redevelopment of Hingham Shipyard by late next spring after four years of discussion and review of the preliminary plan.

The developer, Sea Chain, LLC, will submit the final plan for the project to the Hingham Zoning Board of Appeals Thursday morning, according to Martin Cohn, spokesman for developer Paul Trendowicz.

"This will be the biggest application to be submitted for a project in this state," Cohn said, referring to the 84 pages of narrative describing details of the plan, plus maps. "Then the hearings will begin."

The developer is seeking a special permit to build a mixed-use project.

Cohn said the document reflects feedback from town officials and the community.

"This is not the same as the preliminary proposals," he said, declining to provide further details until the zoning board and other officials have an opportunity to take a look at the final plan.

"The project that will be submitted is in our opinion much better than the previous one," said Cohn. "It takes into consideration issues brought up by the zoning board on the preliminary plan when they gave us 25 pages of detailed recommendations."

The $150-200 million redevelopment of the 129-acre site calls for a more pedestrian-friendly waterfront, improved commuter boat facility, about 500 upscale residential units – including an affordable component — nearly 20 acres of private and public usable open space, improved marina facilities, a day care center, and office and retail space.

Throughout the review process, the developer has met with numerous town officials and neighborhood groups.

Cohn said he "expects everyone will be excited about the definitive plan (presented Thursday) and support the project, which is moving forward. If we get the support we expect, and if the permitting schedule goes as planned, it's possible we can begin building at the shipyard next spring."

Cohn noted that if that projected timeframe holds true, the redevelopment of the shipyard will coincide with its 60th anniversary.

"People will begin to see renewed activity there," he said.

Numerous town boards will review the final plan.

"It's such a massive undertaking that it will take some time for town officials to go through the document," Cohn said.

Project's scope is topic of flyers

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

A group opposed to the scope of the plan to redevelop Hingham Shipyard has resurfaced.

Members of Hingham Residents for Responsible Shipyard Development dropped flyers off at homes near the shipyard on Wednesday, calling the plan "great for the developer, disaster for you, your family, and your home values."

Martin Cohn, spokesperson for the developer, however, says it's "unfortunate that the group has chosen to send out a flyer filled with misinformation. It's important to note that the final application for the redevelopment of Hingham Shipyard, which has received tremendous support from town officials and members of the Hingham community, will be filed on Thursday (see related story), and therefore the information contained in the flyer is not based on fact, but rather speculation."

The citizens group issued a press release in March, 2001 opposing the shipyard plan on the table at that time.

While not against the redevelopment of the site, the group said it opposed the density of the project.

The flyer circulated this week refers to past comments from the development team that the redeveloped shipyard would have a Newburyport style.

The flyer claims the original plan was to "create small boutique shops, restaurants, and condos by the water. . . . Now it appears Sea Chain wants to build another South Boston Seaport," referring to the hundreds of residential units, "big-box retail development," and "more parking spaces than open spaces."

Cohn notes that the "signatory head of the Residents for Responsible Shipyard Development as on file in the Secretary of State's office is Brian Curtis, landlord of Stop & Shop, who is concerned about a potential competitor to be located in the shipyard."

The Residents for Responsible Shipyard Development group also claims the project will put a strain on schools, police and fire departments, and utilities.

The group is also concerned about "thousands of cars pouring in and out of Shipyard Drive onto Route 3A, producing traffic jams and longer commutes for everyone."

Other issues include the availability of water to serve the redeveloped shipyard and a concern that Hingham Square shops and restaurants will face a "drop off in customers."

The group wants the developer "to start over" because it claims the plan has "changed drastically" from the initial one.

The flyer urges concerned residents to contact the planning board.

Despite objections raised by Residents for Responsible Shipyard Development recently, Cohn said, "We remain optimistic and confident that when town officials and the Hingham community get a chance to review the final application, they will be as excited as we are about the redevelopment of Hingham Shipyard."

Live by the sword...

Post 118 pitchers finally meet their match in Sandwich

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Cliché Alert! Cliché Alert!... You live by the sword, you die by the sword.

The Cohasset Post 118 Legion baseball team rode the arms of its big pitchers down the stretch to win seven of its final eight regular season games to sneak in to the last playoff spot in Zone 6, and then got two more monster efforts on the mound to shock top seeded Norwood in the opening round of the playoffs.

Meanwhile, on the other side of home plate, the offense often seemed to provide just enough support to eke out the win.

Well, this winning M.O. finally caught up with the Post 118ers in round two versus Zone 10 champion Sandwich, as the Cohasset pitchers finally met their match and the offense proved unable to make up the difference.

Sandwich aces Jason Smith and Sam Reese combined to keep Cohasset off the scoreboard for 13 consecutive innings before Mike Gulinello finally broke the string by scoring on an infield ground out in the seventh inning of Thursday's game two tilt at Post 118's home Scituate High field.

Of course, by that point, Cohasset's fate for the game and season were pretty much sealed, Gulinello's two-out run making it a 14-1 game.

"It just wasn't our day," said Thursday's starting pitcher for Cohasset, Chris Carr, who was lifted after one plus innings of work.

The 14-1 loss came 24-hours after a heartbreaking 3-0 setback in the best-of-three series opener at Sandwich's home field.

No one felt the heartbreak more than Tom Fitzgerald. The Cohasset lefty spun a complete game 3-hit gem against the high powered Sandwich lineup, going pitch-for-pitch with Sandwich's Jason Smith, a

All-Scholastic Baseball team

Cohasset's Straughn named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Even though this is the largest of our all-scholastic teams, with 21 young men honored, still a handful of those who were named at the end as Honorable Mentions received strong consideration for the honor.

After consulting with area coaches and players, however, we feel secure that we chose the top 21 baseball players in Marinerland this spring.

Tim Straughn —Senior Pitcher/Catcher — Cohasset

Tim Straughn

Cohassets Mr. Everything on the diamond the last few years...led the team in pitching wins and the three major offensive categories (average, home runs and RBIs) his last two seasons...this past year, he was the winning pitcher in four of the Skippers six wins, while hitting a team best .438, which included five home runs...has also played the last few summers for the Cohasset Legion Post 118 team...also an outstanding defenseman for the CHS hockey team, Tim earned Mariner All-Scholastic honors in this sports as well this winter after recording a phenomenal +/- of +69 for the 19-0-1 Skippers...brother Ted (a sophomore to be) joined him on the CHS varsity hockey and baseball teams this school year, as well as the Legion team this summer... is headed to UMass-Amherst, where he hopes to play Div. 1 baseball next spring...Cohasset coach Bob Knurek: "You don't replace a player like Tim Straughn with just one player. It will take several players stepping it up a lot to fill that void. He did it all for us. He was so versatile and talented in so many ways. Then, on top of that, he was just a great leader. He never let the kids get down when things weren't going well."

Chris Martin - Senior (Capt.) Pitcher - Marshfield

Chris Martin

No question here... A three-year varsity player, Martin has established himself as one of the state's best pitchers...Voted the Old Colony League Player of the Year, Martin — who also played shortstop — led the OCL champion Rams on the mound and at the plate...On the hill, Martin went 8-1 in 62 innings pitched, striking out 82 batters and completing eight games...His ERA was an almost untouchable 0.98...In the batter's box, Martin hit a team and league best .453 with one homerun and 20 RBI...An extremely patient hitter, Martin fanned only twice in his 64 at-bats...His performance on both fronts was a key to Marshfield's 20-2 season, which ended in the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney...Also the quarterback on the MHS football squad, Martin did all this damage despite playing with a broken rib sustained in the fall season...An OCL All-star, Martin plans to attend Wheaton College, where he will continue his baseball career. Marshfield coach Bill Battis: "I have not seen a more dominant player from game one to 20. He never slumped. He was in every game, every inning. He was the first one on the field and the last one off. If there was a type of player that you could make a prototype of, he's it."

Brian Polansky - Senior Pitcher - Marshfield

Brian Polansky

The No. 2 hurler for the Old Colony League champion Rams, Polansky went 7-1 in his eight starts this season... In 59 innings pitched, Polansky racked up 50 strikeouts and finished with a 1.08 ERA...The senior was willing to put in some off-season work instead of playing football this season and it showed, as Polansky — who also played rightfield — combined with fellow All-Scholastic Chris Martin for one of the more powerful pitching rotations on the South Shore...The hurler pitched four complete games for Marshfield (20-2) and helped lead the Rams to the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney, where they drew the top seed...The OCL All-star pitched a two-hit, six strikeout win over Scituate this season, which was among his favorite performances...At the plate, the senior hit a homerun, while driving in 10...Polansky plans to attend Roanoke University in Virginia, where he will continue his baseball career. Marshfield coach Bill Battis: "Brian came back in the best shape of his life and had a big season for us. He's a finesse pitcher with a very good curve and changeup. We were fortunate to have the one-two combo."

Cohasset's Mr. Everything on the diamond the last two years, Tim Straughn topped the Skippers in pitching wins, batting average, RBIs and home runs in both 2001 and 2002, and was a no-brainer for our All-Scholastic honors.

Josh Ethier - Senior Reliever/Third base - Marshfield

Josh Ethier

Pitching was among Marshfields strengths this season and Ethier was a one of the reasons why... When called upon to close the deal for the Rams, Ethier more than delivered...In his six pitching appearances, the senior did not allow an earned run in eight innings pitched and went 1-0 and a perfect 4-for-4 in save opportunities...He also allowed just three hits, while striking out 15...When he wasn't pitching, Ethier played a solid defensive third base, jumping from first base last season, and committed only three errors...One of the top offensive threats on the 20-2 Old Colony League champion squad, Ethier hit .380 from the middle of the order, racking up 15 RBI and a team-leading two homeruns in the process...An OCL All-star, Ethier plans to attend St. Lawrence University in N.Y., where he will continue his base-

Cohasset all-star baseballers improve to 7-0

The Cohasset 10-year-old all-star baseball team, on the heels of two consecutive undefeated seasons, has won its first seven games in District 8 Little League.

Excellent pitching combined with consistent hitting and good fielding has enabled the team to reach first place against its South Shore rivals. As in previous years, all eleven players have contributed to the effort.

In the first game against Abington, John Maher delivered the winning RBI in the last inning to bring Cohasset to a 6-5 victory. In the next contest, Thomas Buckley took the hill against Rockland and went five innings in guiding the team to an 8-4 triumph. Jordan Berry blasted a home run over the right field fence to help close the game in which Cohasset managed nine hits, while limiting their opponents to four.

Pitching reached a milestone in the next game, as Berry hurled a no-hitter against Stoughton American. Tied 0-0 through five innings, Cohasset mounted a rally in the top of the sixth with a lead off single by Brendan Doonan. A walk, followed by RBI singles stroked into right field by Buckley and John Kearney sealed the victory.

In playing Canton under the lights, the Cohasset nine demonstrated the hitting prowess that has lead to an 11-run per game average. The hitting attack was led by Robby McCunney, Kearney and Berry, each of whom had five hits. Doonan added to the hitting onslaught by lining a home run over the left field fence.

The town of Whitman has a history of developing good baseball teams and this year's 10-year-old team is no exception. Winners of the Easton tournament, Whitman came to Barnes Field with a 17-2 record. After 4-1/2 innings, Cohasset trailed their opponents 2-1. Ignited by a

Wrath of Kahn

Cohasset laxer emerged to provide much needed scoring punch in '02

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

He may not be able to overpower opponents with dominating strength, dance around opponents with blazing speed or outmatch opponents with an intimidating stature. But through crafty stickwork and an admirable work ethic, Cohasset laxer Curt Kahn has proven himself to be the real deal over the past year.

"He's not the biggest kid around, but he showed a lot of toughness at times this season," lauded Skipper lacrosse coach Kevin Orcutt.

Kahn showed an uncanny ability this year to raise his game when the team needed him to. When Cohasset matched-up against league rival Norwell, who eventually earned a top five seed in the State Tournament, Kahn scored a career best five goals en route to a 9-5 victory, a pivotal win on the team's trip to the playoffs.

When Cohasset took on Marshfield for the second time, the Skippers managed to scrap together a lead, obviously frustrating the Div. I powerhouse. The irritation culminated in the second quarter when Rams goalie Todd Faiella, with a build that serves him well as a lineman for the M.H.S. football team in the fall, leveled Kahn with a vicious check, knocking the CHS attacker out cold. Kahn would not only return to the game a short time after coming to, but he completed it fearlessly, outdoing his stellar Norwell performance by scoring six goals, as the Skippers rolled to a 16-8 victory.

Cohasset met up with Norwell again in the playoffs, with the ball career. Marshfield coach Bill Battis: "He was probably the best OCL closer. He was also a terrific defensive third baseman. Josh really came up big when we needed him whether it be at the plate, on the mound, or in the field."

Joe Belmosto - Senior
Catcher - Marshfield

Another key offensive player for the 20-2 Rams, Belmosto hit .387 from the No. 2 spot in the order, racking up 24 hits and 11 runs scored, which was second behind only fellow All-Scholastic Chris Martin…Was the force behind the Old Colony League's impressive pitching staff, calling all the games for Martin and hurler Brian Polansky…In addition to his offensive contributions, Belmosto was also one of the best defensive catchers in the OCL, gunning down 8-of-15 in stolen base attempts…His performance on both fronts helped Marshfield secure the top seed in the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney, where the team advanced to the quarterfinals, and helped ice the OCL title…Belmosto plans to attend college, where he will continue his baseball career. Marshfield coach Bill Battis: "Joe has a terrific catcher's mentality. He's basically the blood and guts behind the plate. He's a very vocal player and called all of our games. He was a major key to our pitching this season. Defensively, he ran through every backstop he could."

Adam Pardo - Junior (Capt.)
Shortstop - Hanover

Welcome to the Patriot League…Up from the South Shore League last season, Pardo got Hanover on the map as the PL's second-leading hitter at .448, while adding 24 RBI…The talented shortstop also stole nine bases this season and scored 22 runs…Among his most memorable games this season is Hull, at which he went 5-for-5 at the plate…A Patriot League All-star, Pardo joined the first-ever Hanover Legion squad this summer, which made an appearance in the playoffs…In a 14-10 win over Brockton this summer, Pardo had a four-RBI game while clocking a three-run homer in the process…In the fall, Pardo captains the football team at HHS…Pardo is making his first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team.

Rob Schuler - Junior Outfielder - Hanover

Rob Schuler

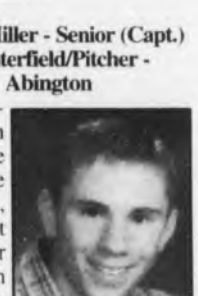
A talented three-sport athlete at Hanover High, Schuler's performance this year helped Hanover complete a successful Patriot League season and appearance in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…Using speed and a strong arm, Schuler was a defensive gem in the outfield for Hanover, playing primarily in centerfield…At the plate, Schuler's patience paid off, consistently providing clutch hitting…In addition to playing baseball in the spring, Schuler kept in shape playing Legion ball over the summer…There, in a 14-10 win over Brockton this summer, Schuler went 4-for-4 at the plate, while making some clutch defensive plays as well…Also a talented soccer and basketball player for HHS, Schuler was named to our All-Scholastic hoop squad last winter…Schuler will captain all three HHS sports teams on which he plays next year.

CJ Hillyer - Sophomore
Pitcher - Abington

CJ Hillyer

The top ace of the Abington squad for the past two seasons, Hillyer went 7-3 from the mound, pitching 54 innings while striking out 65 batters and walking only five for a 2.09 ERA…A lefty, Hillyer was also the team's power at the plate, leading the team with a .448 batting average…He also racked up 24 RBI and three triples…The sophomore was also a solid defensive first baseman for Abington (14-8) when he wasn't on the mound…Accomplished something few hurlers ever do when he pitched a perfect game against Cohasset on April 23, racking up 13 strikeouts in the process…A two-time South Shore League All-star and Mariner All-Scholastic, Hillyer helped lead the Green Wave to the quarterfinals of the Div. 3 Soutn Sectional tourney…Also a talented basketball player at AHS, Hillyer will be among the baseball team's top returning players. Abington coach Steve Peraklsis: "CJ is a real special player. He had a real good season and as a sophomore, he'll only get better in everything he does. It is tough to say someone will only get better when he already pitched a no-hitter this season."

Mike Miller - Senior (Capt.)
Centerfield/Pitcher -
Abington



Mike Miller

A three-time South Shore League All-star, Miller got it done for the Green Wave both on the field and at the plate… The senior was ranked second on the Abington team in batting with a solid .394…He also added 22 RBI for the Green Wave (14-8)…His performance helped lead Abington to the quarterfinals of the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney, where the team nearly knocked off eventual winner and SSL rival Norton…Miller stayed in shape this summer by playing Legion baseball…A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in baseball, Miller was also named to our football squad last fall…He also was a three-year member of the AHS basketball team…Miller plans to attend college next fall and may continue his baseball career.

Adam Bowser - Junior
Shortstop - Abington

Was a key offensive player on the Abington High squad this season…Was among the top hitters on the team, boasting a .384 average, while also recording 16 RBI…A South Shore League All-star, Bowser helped Abington (14-8) to the quarterfinals of the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney, where they nearly knocked off eventual champ Norton in a hard-fought 4-3 decision…To keep himself busy during the summer, Bowser took his talents to Abington's Legion squad…Bowser also plays football at AHS in the fall, where he doubles as a fullback and linebacker…Just a junior, Bowser will return to the Abington baseball roster next spring.

Frank Cronin - Senior
Pitcher - Rockland

Frank Cronin

A virtual "Big Unit" on the mound for the Bulldogs, the 6-foot, 5-inch Cronin was one of the most feared lefty pitchers on the South Shore for the past three seasons… This year was no different as Cronin pitched an incredible 81 and a half innings…A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Cronin struck out an impressive 76 batters and was responsible for seven of the team's nine wins on the year…Cronin finished with a 1.72 ERA…Was the catalyst behind Rockland's late-season turnaround, in which the team won six of its last ten games, after going 3-7 to start the year…Cronin is no stranger to late-season of magic, as last year he helped land the Rockland squad in the semifinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…A Patriot League All-star, Cronin plans to attend UMass Dartmouth, where he will major in business and continue his baseball career. Rockland coach Rick Fredericks: "Frank has an outstanding presence on the mound and will succeed on any level he pitches at. He brought a lot to the program as far as being a player and a team leader. We will miss Frank a great deal."

Brian Welch - Senior
Rockland

Was a clutch hitter for the streaky Rockland Bulldog team…Welch hit .344 this season, clobbering two homers in the process…The senior was also the team leader in three other offensive categories, those being extra base hits, stolen bases, and runs scored…Making his first appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic squad, Welch was also voted a Patriot League All-star for Rockland, which finished with a 9-11 record, just missing post-season play after an impressive run last year that found them in the Div. 3 South Sectional semifinals…Welch plans to attend college in the fall and may continue his baseball career.

Nick DeVito - Junior (Capt.)
Pitcher/Shortstop - Hingham

Nick DeVito

Arguably one of the best and most versatile players in the state, DeVito had yet another impressive campaign, despite an early season injury…A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, DeVito entered the year coming off finger surgery, only to get hit by a pitch on the thumb in Hingham's (9-11) season-opener at Oliver Ames…Although the injury kept him off the mound for two-thirds of the season, DeVito more than made up for it when he did return…The junior hit .380 in limited time from the No. 3 spot in the order and went 3-0 in his pitching appearances…DeVito continued his return this summer on the Hingham Legion team, which qualified for the 12-team South Sectional tourney…There, he followed up a four-hit game at Abington, with a 3-for-3 performance at the plate and pitched a shutout at Bridgewater…A three-time Patriot League All-star, DeVito also plays year round for the highly competitive South Shore Seadogs travel team…DeVito return again as a captain on the HHS squad next year and is already being heavily recruited by top baseball colleges. Hingham coach Dan McHugh: "What can I not say about Nick. He's just a tremendous player. He's one of the premier players in Eastern Mass. He had some injuries this year, but still dominated. He's an exciting player to watch."

Andrew Genovese - Senior
Rightfield - Hingham

Andrew Genovese

Perhaps better known for his hockey talents, Genovese was also a clutch player for Hingham's baseball squad… Batted .350 from the cleanup spot for the Harbormen, often driving in No. 3 batter and fellow All-Scholastic Nick DeVito… A power-hitter, Genov-ese's strength was among his best baseball attributes…A solid defensive player in right-field, Genovese's strong arm was feared by Patriot League base runners, who rarely took a chance to stretch out an extra base…Was praised by coach Dan McHugh for being a great team leader despite not being a captain this season…A Patriot League All-star, Genovese helped lead the HHS hockey team to a Div. 1 state title last season and an impressive showing in the Div. 1A Elite Eight tourney this year…The senior is making his third appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic squad, twice being named to the hockey team and is a newcomer on the baseball squad…Genovese plans to attend prep school next fall, where he will continue his hockey career. Hingham coach Dan McHugh: "He's obviously a very successful hockey player, but he carried that same intensity over to the baseball field. He did everything we asked of him and then some. He's a very dangerous hitter and a great kid."

Bob Savoy — Senior
Pitcher/Shortstop — Norwell

Bob Savoy

Savoy was the top pitcher and hitter for the Clippers this season…was the winning pitcher in four of his team's six victories…now a two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in baseball…three time South Shore League all-star…batted .370 this year with a team best 10 doubles and five triples…also had 10 stolen bases…made the move from center field to shortstop after his sophomore year…also a Mariner All-Scholastic in basketball who helped lead the Clippers to a 25-1 season this winter as the team's starting point guard…played football and golf during years at NHS…an Honor Roll student…will attend Bentley College this fall and is leaning toward majoring in Business… is intending to tryout for the Bentley basketball team as a walk on, and possibly baseball as well.

Jason Kustka — Senior
Centerfield – Norwell

Jason Kustka

Now a two-time Mariner All-Scholastic… sensational defensive center fielder who was also hitting over .400 until a late season finger injury rendered him far less effective at the plate…finished with around a .340 average…a three year varsity starter…two time South Shore League all-star…a speedster who batted leadoff for the Clippers and led the team in stolen bases despite missing a few games with the finger injury…also a sensational soccer player for N.H.S., making SSL all-stars as a junior and named a team captain as a senior…unfortunately, he partially tore his ACL in this past fall's season opener for soccer and missed his entire senior season…a very good student…will attend the U.S. Military Academy at West Point this fall, and left for boot camp on July 1…will look to play intramural or club soccer and baseball for West Point.

Jesse Cole – Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher/Infield — Scituate

Jesse Cole

Finished a phenomenal high school career this spring with an 8-2 record, a 0.94 ERA and 100 strikeouts in 67 innings, seemingly getting stronger as the weather got warmer…earned two wins on the mound in Sailors run to the south sectional state championship game…hit the winning home run and struck out 12 in a thrilling 4-3 win over top seeded Dighton-Rehoboth in the semifinals…finished the season with three home runs and close to a .400 batting average, including .450 in the post-season…threw his first career no-hitter this year in a 1-0 loss to Hingham…had two other complete game shutouts…finished this season on a roll, surrendering just one earned run and six hits in last three regular season outings…was Patriot League MVP as a junior, leading the league in both hitting (.500) and ERA (0.84) in 2001…three time PL all-star…ranked 16th in his graduating class…has been a standout the last few summers for the Cohasset Post 118 Legion team…also pitched some for the East Bridgewater Royals in the Cranberry League this summer…headed to Wofford College on a full Div. 1 baseball scholarship this fall…father Kerry is part owner and operator of the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham…Scituate coach Kevin Greer: "Jesse's an extremely talented kid who really stepped up bigger and bigger down the stretch when we needed him this year. He's one of the few kids I've ever worked with who played baseball 365 days a year, and probably thought about it 24/7. That's why he is where he is today, and why I wouldn't be surprised if we heard about him down the road too."

Jason Connelly – Senior
(Capt.)
Shortstop/Pitcher — Scituate

Jason Connelly

Named the 2002 Patriot League Most Valuable Player after a sensational senior year at the plate, in the field and on the mound… won the league's triple crown award by topping the charts in batting average (.514), RBIs (27) and home runs (four)… threw two no-hitters this season, the second one an 82-pitch gem versus Norwell in the regular season finale…finished 4-4 overall with a 2.65 ERA and 50 strikeouts in 50-1/3 innings…has great natural movement on his fastball…formed a dynamic 1-2 pitching punch with Jesse Cole that helped carry the Sailors to the south sectional state championship game…also a sensational defensive shortstop…a two-time Patriot League all-star…batted .407 last year…has been a standout the last few summers for the Cohasset Post 118 Legion team…also an excellent football player for Scituate High the past few years, earning captaincy, league all-star and Mariner All-Scholastic honors as well for his senior year (as a wideout/safety)…headed to Western New England College this fall, where he was recruited for baseball as a pitcher and infielder…will major in Education…Scituate coach Kevin Greer: "Jason is a bulldog, one of the best competitors I've ever been around. He'll do whatever you ask as a coach, and his next coach will appreciate that. He's been an excellent shortstop since I've known him, and he really put it all together this year. I'm extremely happy for him. This kind of year couldn't have happened for a better kid."

Greg Levin – Senior (Capt.)
Centerfield – Scituate

Greg Levin

Though often overshadowed by flashier players with gaudier numbers (cases in point being the last two Patriot League all-star snubbings), everyone closely associated with the Div. 3 South Sectional runner-up Sailors seems to understand just how vital Levin was to the cause…a great catalyst in the leadoff spot, Levin boasted an on base percentage around .450 and proved extremely adept in stealing bases (team best 15) and taking the extra base when opportunities arose to do so…centerfield was a black hole for opposing hitters, as the speedy Levin got to several balls that appeared ticketed for the gaps and caught virtually everything he could reach… has been a standout the last few summers for the Cohasset Post 118 Legion team…biggest contributions, according to coaches, may have come off the field as a leader — further testament to this being his three other selections for captaincy of S.H.S. teams (as a senior in basketball and a junior and senior in soccer)…a sensational goalie for the varsity soccer team the past three seasons, Levin earned Patriot League and Eastern Mass. all-star honors, as well as Mariner and Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic honors this past fall in his senior season…suffered a broken jaw early in first half of heartbreaking 2-1 overtime loss to Hingham in state soccer tourney, decided on penalty kicks, but never let on to anyone about the injury during the game…starting point guard with S.H.S.'s 2002 South Sectional finalist basketball team…one of six Boston Globe Student-Athlete of the Year scholarship winners…one of three WATD Male Athletes of the Year…the number one ranked student in his graduating class of 174 and co-Valedictorian…National Honors Society member…will attend Bowdoin College, and is leaning toward majoring in Math…will try his luck as a walk-on in basketball or baseball…Scituate coach Kevin Greer: "It's when you get a chance to watch Greg play every day, and just be around him every day, that you see how much he means to a team. He's one of the best outfielders I've ever had. He got off to a little bit of a slow start hitting, but he still kept finding ways to get on base and get our offense going."

Rob McLean — Senior
Pitcher/Outfield —
Silver Lake

Rob McLean

A well rounded player who played a big part in the Lakers run to the state tourney with his bat, arm and glove… the big lefty hitter/righty thrower led the team in home runs (four) and RBIs (18) and hit a second best .333 (23-for-69)…won the team's "Sluggers Award" as a senior and team M.V.P. as a junior…Old Colony League All-Star…went 3-3 on the mound, the high point a complete game 4-2 win over the OCL's first place Taunton team…two of his four home runs were game winners…Kingston native also played Legion baseball for Kingston's Post 387 team the last three years…was recruited to play baseball the next two years at Massasoit College, which boasts one of the top Junior College programs in the nation…will major in Liberal Arts, and plans to transfer to a four year school after his sophomore year (lists UMass-Dartmouth or Amherst as possibilities)…might also give basketball a try at Massassoit…Silver Lake head coach Steve Giambanco: "Rob is a throwback player. He reminds me of a lot of players in the 60s and 70s. He's not real flashy and you don't hear a lot from him. He just goes out there and does the job. He battles. At the plate, he just wants to go up there and get his three rips. On the mound, he just makes the most of what he's got on a given day, and he never lets down."

Griffen Benelli — Senior
Pitcher/Outfield —
Silver Lake

Griffen Benelli

Finished second in voting for Old Colony League MVP honors after a sensational senior year on the mound and at the plate…was the driving force behind the Lakers surprising run to a playoff berth, going 6-3 on the mound and finishing with a sensational 1.57 ERA…best effort may have been a complete game 2-hit, 10 strikeout outing against Hingham in the season opener to direct the Lakers to a 2-0 win…had good command of several pitches, with the curve being his "out" pitch…Kingston native also led the team in hitting with a .411 batting average, to go along with nine RBIs and a home run…a three time OCL all-star…voted team M.V.P. this year…Patriot Ledger and Brockton Enterprise All-Scholastic selection this year…also played varsity soccer the last two years at Silver Lake…a high honors student…played Legion baseball the last few years for the Kingston Post 387 team…was recruited and awarded financial aid package to play baseball at Eckerd College in St. Petersburg, Fla. next year…will major in Liberal Arts… Silver Lake head coach Steve Giambanco: "It's scary to think where we might have been without Griff. He was just so consistent on the mound and at the plate. He's a little bit of a throwback player too like Rob (McLean). He just wants to go out and play hard every time he takes the field."

Honorable Mention:

lead-off double from Andy McKenna, whose diving catch at second saved a run, Cohasset scored six runs in the bottom of the fifth to put the game out of reach. Three consecutive singles by McCunney, Buckley and Kearney, followed by Doonan's double with the bases loaded, locked up the win.

Against Weymouth, the 10-year-olds continued their district dominance. After a lead off home run over the right center field fence by McCunney, Cohasset never fell behind. Hitting continued with Buckley blasting two doubles, McKenna stroking three consecutive singles and Berry launching his third home run of the season. McCunney's pitching handcuffed the Weymouth offense as he allowed only one hit and notched 15 strikeouts (out of possible 18) in his six-inning stint.

North Randolph became the next victim as the Cohasset nine won 9-2 before a home crowd at Barnes Field. Tommy Buckley earned his second win of the season, limiting the opponents to two hits over four innings while notching eight strikeouts. Their record then mushroomed to 7-0 for the season as they approach the last three games and the playoffs.

Through the midpoint of the season, six pitchers have taken the mound. In addition to the pitchers noted above, Brendan Doonan, Eamon Davis and John Kearney have contributed to the team's success. Hitting has been exceptional, with four players batting over .400- McCunney (.617), Buckley (.516), Kearney (.433) and Berry (.431). Newcomer Chris Walsh has added outfield skills to the team's strengths, while Justin Yeager has shown versatility in playing a range of key positions in the infield and outfield. John Giuggio has also provided consistent and timely hitting, including a clutch single with the bases loaded to defeat Foxboro.

Since their season as eight year olds, this core of players has managed 38 wins while losing only two games. As a result, the players are looking forward to the challenges of the playoffs.

As with past teams, this squad has distinguished itself in all the key aspects of baseball: pitching, defense, base running and hitting. Although the season is just past the mid-point, the outlook for the ballplayers appears bright. Along the first part of the season, they have battled teams evenly, come from behind in the late innings and dominated. Most importantly, the kids are having fun playing baseball, learning the value of teamwork and making friends.

The team is again managed by Bob McCunney and coaches Ralph Berry, Mike Maher, Mike Kearney and Peter Buckley.

legitimate pro prospect with a fastball clocked in the mid-90s.

Fitzgerald, a lefty with an assortment of quality breaking pitches who graduated from B.C. High this spring and is now off to pitch for Babson College, struck out six on Wednesday, while walking none and surrendering just three hits. All three runs against him were unearned.

"Tom was unbelievable," lauded Post 118 coach Scott Arnold. "We just couldn't get anything going behind him, but the Smith kid was a great pitcher. My hat is definitely off to him."

The only two hits Smith surrendered came off the bats of Tim Straughn and Gulinello. The latter was the only Cohasset baserunner on the day to reach second, doing so on a passed ball after his second inning single.

Only half the script remained the same the following day, as Sandwich exploded out of the gate with four runs in the top of the fourth inning and then six more in the second.

A hit batsmen to open the game, a sacrifice bunt and then an RBI double by Sean Barrett made it 1-0. Another walk was followed by a three-run blast by Sandwich's Kelly Ladow to make it 4-0 before Cohasset's first at bat.

Sandwich strung together seven of its 17 hits on the day in the second inning, resulting in six runs and a quick hook for Carr, another B.C. High grad who had pitched very well in his previous two starts.

Though not quite as dominant as Smith, Sam Reece went six strong innings on the mound for Sandwich, scattering one hit (to first baseman Brian Woods) and five walks, while posting nine strikeouts.

Cohasset scored its lone run of the game in its final at bat. Gulinello legged out a one-out infield single in the seventh, stole second and moved to third when neither the shortstop nor second baseman moved to take the throw at second. A chopper to third by Fitzgerald then plated the speedy Gulinello with a run that meant nothing more than the end of a shutout.

Jason Connelly was originally slated to get the start on the mound, but was not sufficiently recovered from a severely sprained ankle he suffered in last Saturday's post-season opening win over Norwood. Connelly, who was also the team's top shortstop and a huge bat in the lineup, was limited to designated hitter duties in both Sandwich games.

"I thought I might be able to go, but the doctor and my father were really against it," said Connelly, who was originally prescribed a week off his feet.

"All year, we've been able to count on Jason, so losing him was a tough blow," noted Carr.

Seemingly resigned to their fate early on in the playoff ouster, there were a lot of smiles on Cohasset's side of the field in the late stages. Connelly, lifted early on for a pinch hitter, acted as pitching coach in the last few innings, making several trips to the mound.

A couple of the trips were to see his pal Alex Knight, who pitched his first two innings in seven years (the last time being at age of 11), closing things out for Cohasset with two scoreless innings. He surrendered one walk and one hit, e keeping the Sandwich hitters off balance with a big slow bender, change up and even slower change up.

"We were happy to be back in the playoffs and happy with what we did," said Carr, when asked about the seeming lack of discouragement after the game. "Our goal after not making the playoffs last year was to make it again, and we did that with a lot of the guys who were here when we made the playoffs two years ago.

"And we beat Norwood, the team that bounced us two years ago, so that felt good. It was a good year."

Cohasset Swim team sails past Scituate Harbor Yacht Club

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It has been a busy season for Cohasset swimmers and this week they added to their schedule with an extra mid-week meet against Scituate Yacht Club. It was the second of two smaller meets this season, with half the usual squad, but it proved to be an excellent outing for Cohasset who brought home another decisive win, ending the day more than 300 points ahead of their hosts.

Cohasset started the meet well with wins in all eight of the medley relays (boys, eight and under: 1st: Culhane; Faber; Mahoney; Durkin, J.; 4th: Kennedy; Murphy; Carpenter; Kissick; girls: 1st: Donohue; Seraikas; Buckley; Kissick; 3rd: Carrier; Teague; Farren, A.; Caron; boys, ten and under: 1st: Carrier; Durkin, T.; Doonan; Kissick; 2nd: Queenan; Leahy; Buckley; Campbell; girls: 1st: Mahoney; Michalowski; Lehr; Regan; 2nd: Zappolo; Teague; Musto; Donohue; boys, twelve and under: 1st: Drybanski; Musto; Doonan; Hunt; 2nd: Porter; Kuppens; Muir; Harper; girls; 1st: Hernan; Lehr; Meehan; Teague; 3rd: Regan; Foley; Campbell; Anderson; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Bilton; Lehr; Berg; Tehranian; 2nd: Blackburn; Faber; Conway; Zappolo; girls: 1st: Daley; Anderson; Englander; Durkin; 2nd: Sax; Faber; Regan; Lehr). By the end of the 200 yard relays, Cohasset had accumulated sixty four points to Scituate's 32.

The meet continued with wins for Cohasset in both the boys and girls fifty yard freestyle (boys: 1st: Kissick, J.; 2nd: Carrier, J.; girls:1st: Lehr, T.; 2nd: Karski, E.) and the swimmers kept up the pace with first place finishes in five of the six individual medley relays (boys, twelve and under, one hundred yard medley: 3rd: Doonan, P.; 4th:

Kuppens, C.; girls: 1st: Hernan, E.; 2nd: Campbell, A.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Conway, C.; girls: 1st: Durkin, L.; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Bilton, B.; 2nd: Blackburn, C.; girls: 1st: Regan, D.; 4th: Faber, A.)

In the twenty five yard freestyle Cohasset continued to finish well, and once again won all four of their races (boys, eight and under: 1st: Durkin, J.; 2nd: Mahoney, R.; girls: 1st: Kissick, H.; 3rd: Seraikas, A.; boys, ten and under, 1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; girls: 1st: Lehr, T.; 2nd: Michalowski, A.). The fifty yard events produced the same success and Cohasset finished the freestyles with six further wins and a lead of one hundred and twenty eight point lead (boys, twelve and under: 1st: Drybanski, J.; 2nd: Musto, C.; girls: 1st: Meehan, S.; 2nd: Teague,

M.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Gammon, B.; 2nd: Faber, C.; girls: 1st: Englander, E.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Lehr, R.; 2nd: Tehranian, K.; girls: 1st: Anderson, C.; 2nd: Lehr, R.).

The butterfly produced the first obstacle in the meet and although the eight and under boys brought home another win, the girls just missed a first place finish and took second and fourth (boys: 1st: Mahoney, R.; 4th: Kissick, C.; girls: 2nd: Farren, A.; 4th: Buckley, M.). In the next five races Cohasset once again took first place, but missed the win in the fourteen and under girls event (boys, ten and under: 1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Buckley, T.; girls: 1st: Mahoney, M.; 2nd: Karski, E.; boys, twelve and under, 1st: Doonan, P.; 2nd: Muir, K.; girls: 1st: Meehan, S.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Conway, C.; girls: 2nd: Daley, M.). The seventeen and unders rounded off the event with first and second for the boys and a first for the girls, taking Cohasset ahead by another thirty four points (boys, seventeen and under, 1st: Faber, S.; 2nd: Blackburn, C.; girls: 1st: Regan, D.). Cohasset had now accumulated two hundred and fifty one points to SHYC's eighty nine.

In the twenty five and fifty yard breaststroke the wins just kept on coming with Cohasset taking first place in all ten of the events (boys, eight and under: 1st: Durkin, J.; 2nd: Faber, J.; girls: 1st: Seraikas, A.; 2nd: Donohue, M.; boys, ten and under: 1st: Leahy, S.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; girls: 1st: Michalowski, A.; 2nd: Zappolo, C.; boys, twelve and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Drybanski, J.; girls: 1st: Lehr, S.; 2nd: Foley; A.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Gammon, B.; 2nd: Zappolo, N.; girls: 1st: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Campbell, A.; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Lehr, R.; 3rd: Faber, S.; girls, 1st: Anderson, C.; 2nd: Faber, A.).

The backstroke was the final individual event and, again, Cohasset stormed home in first place in all but the final seventeen and under girls fifty yard race (boys, eight and under: 1st: Murphy, C.; 2nd: Culhane, E.J.; girls: 1st: Kissick, H.; 2nd: Donohue, M.; boys, ten and under: 1st: Kissick, J.; 2nd: Carrier, J.; girls: 1st: Mahoney, C.; 2nd:

Zappolo, C.; boys, twelve and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Porter, I.; girls: 1st: Hernan, E.; 2nd: Teague, M.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Conway, C.; 2nd: Zappolo, N.; girls: 1st: Daley, M.; 2nd: Englander, E.; boys, seventeen and under, 1st: Bilton, B.; 2nd: Tehranian, K.; girls: 2nd: Lehr, R.). With only one event to go Cohasset had now accumulated four hundred and two points to SHYC's 115.

The afternoon ended with the free relays and Cohasset kept up the pace to finish as they had started with wins at every age level (one hundred yard free relay: boys, eight and under: 1st: Mahoney; Murphy; Culhane; Durkin; 3rd: Carpenter; Kissick; Kennedy; Faber; girls 1st: Donohue; Farren, A.; Seraikas; Kissick; 3rd: Buckley; Farren, N.; Teague; Caron; boys, ten and under: 1st: Doonan; Carrier; Durkin; Kissick; 2nd: Buckley; Campbell; Leahy; Queenan; girls: 1st: Michalowski; Mahoney; Zappolo; Lehr; 2nd: Regan; Kucinski; Musto; Teague; boys, twelve and under: 1st: Drybanski; Musto; Doonan; Hunt; 2nd: Porter; Harper; Muir; Kuppens; girls: 1st: Meehan; Mahoney; Teague; Hernan; 3rd: Anderson; Hunt; Regan; Buckley; 200 yard free relay: boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Bilton, Faber; Tehranian; Lehr; 3rd: Zappolo; Faber; Gammon; Blackburn; girls: 1st: Anderson; Regan; Englander; Durkin; 3rd: Sax; Lehr; Faber; Daley). The meet ended with a massive four hundred and sixty six points for Cohasset, and one hundred and forty seven points for Scituate.

Like the Eel River meet, Wednesday's competition was another great day out, at a beautiful swim club. The whole afternoon moved at a more relaxed pace, there was a refreshing sea breeze and, I suppose we should mention, the swimmers produced a very comfortable win. This was the team's fifth win of the season leaving them undefeated as they approach the powerful Knights of Columbus in Friday's meet. Congratulations to all the swimmers and we look forward to an exciting competition on Friday.

Quality shots from bad angles and all sorts of positions, such as this one, were pretty commonplace from Kahn (#11) this spring.

host Clippers a heavy favorite riding their 11 game winning streak into the quarterfinal match-up. Kahn proved to be the difference-maker again, posting five goals again, as the Skippers upset Norwell to advance in the tourney.

"Curt Kahn was the difference in this game, as far as I'm concerned," asserted Norwell coach Frank Granara following the game. "He was a lefty shot, and we hadn't seen too many of those this season, and none that we saw compared to him. He was hitting shots from all kinds of tough angles. He had a great, quick shot that was just incredibly accurate, and we didn't have an answer for it."

Kahn entered the 2002 season not expecting to be the go-to scorer. During his freshman and sophomore seasons, the Cohasset attack relied heavily on the incredible scoring ability of Ronan Buick. With Buick graduating in 2001 though, it appeared that seniors Paul Previte and Jason Moore were more than capable of picking up most of the slack.

However, Previte was rendered virtually ineffective for the season, when he suffered a broken wrist during a pre-season practice. Moore also lost much of his ability as ankle problems nagged him all year. This left Kahn as the lone attacker who had previously proved himself as a legitimate scoring threat.

And Kahn stepped up to fill much of the void created by the graduation and injuries, easily winninghte team scoring race with 51 goals and 83 points. Even when teams began to get the scouting report that Kahn was the team's main scorer, he continued to score through double and triple teams. Even more impressive was that Kahn never seemed to get rattled in games, which included a match in Duxbury, where the Dragons had their two All-American defensemen taking turns smothering the Skipper.

Kahn has gotten the notice of more than just other South Shore teams. He has already heard from four NESCAC (New England Small College Athletic Conference) schools who have interest in him. With perennial national division three champ Middlebury leading the way, NESCAC is the most competitive D3 league in the country.

Kahn was also invited to play at the Maryland Top 205 camp, arguably the most prestigious individual lax camp. Kahn performed extremely well, scoring at least once in every game, including a hat trick and two more multi-goal games.

Curt Kahn.

Most recently, Kahn was a top performer as a member of the Emass Bay States team, a team that has now won the gold medal in two consecutive years. Kahn was third on the team in goals scored, notching four goals in the tourney opener, and tallied three in the decisive 13-9 win over the North Regional team in the gold medal game.

This weekend, he will head down to Washington DC to play at Johns Hopkins University in the national tournament Champ Camp. Playing for the invitation-only Top Gun All-Star team, Kahn will play for a team in a tournament that is for teams what the Top 205 campis for individuals: the best competition of high school lacrosse in the country.

In preparation for the tourney, the Top Gun All-Stars have beaten the Maine All-Stars, the New Hampshire All-Stars, and an impressive club team called Team Blockbuster.

Kahn has been working tirelessly to improve his shot, which is already considered one of the most accurate in the state. He has also been on a weightlifting regimen, obviously trying to add a power-game to the slick and artful package he has now.

"Curt showed us a lot," reported Orcutt. "He really turned into a gamer, and took it to another level."

A scary thought for Skipper opponents in 2003: Kahn is more than capable of taking his game to yet another level as a senior captain.

Cohasset divers cool down in Duxbury

The Cohasset Diving Team picked up its good form from last year, with most members of the team returning. This year, Cohasset has 19 members on the diving team, 12 girls and 7 boys.

The team recently completed the regular summer meets, with impressive scores registered by many of the divers. In the July 9th meet, Sean McKenna, Carly Salerno, Wesley Medwid and Charlotte Sida all performed well enough to place in the top three for their respective age group. Carly and Wes repeated their top performance at the July 16th meet, and Devon Bell was also among the top finishers, placing third in the boys 12 & under group.

The 2002 Cohasset Diving Team 2002 roster includes:

Girls 17 & Under- Mia Lieb-Lappan, Samantha Lehr, Sarah Malone, Charlotte Sida, Roxanne Tehranian, Emma Weston

Girls 12 & Under- Betsy Crawford, Sally Meehan, Carly Salerno, Sheelah Scott, Colby Smazel, Michela Valente

Boys (Combined Ages)- Devon Bell, Wesley Medwid, Andrew McKenna, Sean McKenna, Jay Salerno, Brian Scott, Tyler Stairs

All diving meets were held at the Duxbury Yacht club, with the exception of the championship, which will be at Wheaton College in Norton on Aug 10. Representing Cohasset at the Championship will be Charlotte Sida, Carly Salerno, Devon Bell and Wesley Medwid.

This Friday, the team will have a "red, white and blue" fun meet at the pool in Cohasset. The Awards Banquet is being held on Friday evening.

Maura Duffy and Amy Wojitasiwski coach the 2002 Cohasset Diving Team.

Each year the Music Festival crowds at Scituate's Heritage Days gets larger. This weekend's nationally-known touring acts should fill Front Street to overflowing.

Music festival rocks Heritage Days

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

It just keeps getting bigger and better.

With an entertainment lineup that includes the likes of J. Geils, The Band, Eric Burdon and John Sebastian, the 2002 Scituate Heritage Days Music Festival is sure to draw crowds from all over the South Shore and beyond.

Music festival organizer Gerry McMorrow has turned up the volume on the annual weekend-long celebration bringing nationally known touring acts to town in greater numbers each year.

John Sebastian formerly of the Lovin' Spoonful is one of the headliners at this year's Heritage Days Music Festival. So too, is Eric Burdon of the Animals.

This year, the musical bill is bigger and more expansive than ever, with several name performers usually tied with classic 1960s and 70s rock but whose musical repertoires have come to extend into the varieties of American roots music from previous decades as well. The star attractions include, on Saturday afternoon, guitarist J. Geils and harpist/vocalist Magic Dick, and on Sunday afternoon, keyboardist/vocalist Garth Hudson and the new touring edition of the Band, followed by Eric Burdon, the legendary vocalist of the Animals ("House of the Rising Sun," "We Gotta Get Out of This Place") then later with "War" ("Spill the Wine") and a subsequent solo career. All of these artists have solid and well-documented blues roots in their music and will surely include healthy doses of the traditional sounds along with their signature golden-era hits during their sets.

But kicking off the Saturday afternoon bill is John Sebastian, the ex-Lovin' Spoonful leader who will be showcasing the latest of many roots-music ventures from the last three decades of his solo career.

Accompanied by ace guitarist/multi-instrumentalist Jimmy Vivino, who is a much in-demand session player and name-act touring sideman when not busy as bandleader on "Late Night with Conan O'Brien," Sebastian will spotlight the musical roots of his own career as well as many other 60s folk-rockers with a set of traditional jug-band style ballads, breakdowns and blues, much like what the singer has offered with his most recent band project, the J Band, and the group's critically praised CD release, 1999's "Chasin' Gus' Ghost."

Dancers with the Pembroke School of Performing Arts entertains the festival crowd at last year's event.

Pembroke festival as colorful as ever

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The Pembroke Arts Festival was part of a new and groundbreaking national trend when the annual event was launched in 1968, bringing the works of area artists into an open-air setting for a public event supplemented with added community activities.

Now in its 35th year, the Pembroke Arts Festival has grown into a multi-faceted, multi-media event, with its main attraction, a juried art and photography exhibit, free live entertainment including musicians, dance troupes and performing artists. The festival will be held this Saturday, Aug 2, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. and Sunday, Aug. 3, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the Town Green, Route 14 in Pembroke Center. Entertainment is scheduled both days from noon until closing.

Along with the juried art and photo show, the visual arts will include a children's art exhibit to be judged separately from that of the adult artists, Artists-In-Action demonstrations on both Saturday and Sunday afternoons and an Invitational Crafts feature new to the festival this year including traditional and contemporary crafts by artists from Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Eliza Benotti, co-chairperson of this year's festival and a Pembroke resident, makes special note of two items included in the art exhibit, group efforts in mixed media titled "Circles" and, with a patriotic theme, "American Flag," by residents of Pembroke's New England Villages Living Center, a group home for adults with mental and physical disabilities.

"The pieces by the New England Villages residents were accepted entirely on their own merits, and not by any special consideration," said Benotti, "which is really great about them being in the show. The judges had no advance word that the artists were from the Living Center."

"What's also noteworthy is that this year's festival almost didn't happen," noted Benotti, whose daughter, Erica, is scheduled to participate in the Artists-In-Action demonstrations on Saturday and Sunday. "There was a lack of people involved in the event when the planning began. But then an article appeared in the Pembroke Mariner reporting the problem, and other parties who read it offered to get involved and make sure the festival would go on," she said.

The highlight of the live entertainment will be a Saturday evening concert by Greg Greenway and his band. Greenway, a Boston-based,

Rollins is a "Rings Master" in Cirque du Soleil

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Holly Rollins may have been a gymnast at Wrentham's King Phillip High School, but she never thought that just a decade after graduation she'd be a featured performer with Cirque du Soleil.

"When I did my last competition in high school, I thought that was it for me and gymnastics," Rollins explained last week while preparing for the Boston opening of Cirque du Soleil's "Quidam" at Suffolk Downs.

While majoring in health education at the University of Montana, Rollins opted to minor in modern dance. Before long, she found herself including gymnastics in her dance routines. After college, her career included a stint as an acrobatic dancer in a production of the Folies Bergere at the Tropicana Hotel in Las Vegas. After six months in Sin City, Rollins accepted a six-month gig with Club Med in the Bahamas. She soon extended that stay to a full year.

"I fell in love with the flying trapeze and ended up joining the Club Med Circus program," Rollins recalls. From Club Med, Rollins was recruited to join Cirque du Soleil, a theatrical blend of circus acts, played out against fairyland sets, and splashed with magical effects. Founded in Montreal in 1984 by street performer Guy Laliberte, Cirque du Soleil is currently presenting seven shows on four continents.

In "Quidam," Rollins is one of a four-person troupe of aerial hoops artists. In hoops suspended above the stage, the performers pivot and twirl through the air, at times solo and at times in unison, performing stunning feats of grace and dexterity.

Even while hanging from a 120-foot overhead conveyor, Rollins can clearly see why 4.5 million people have come out for "Quidam," in 10 countries and 35 cities, since its 1996 debut. "Cirque du Soleil combines the athleticism of many traditional circuses with a more artistic and theatrical component," Rollins says. "Audiences love the show, too, which is what I enjoy most about performing."

(Cirque du Soleil will present "Quidam" under the blue-and-yellow Grand Chapiteau at Suffolk Downs through Sept. 8. For tickets and further information call 1-800-678-5440, or online at cirquedusoleil.com.)

Perfect Pancakes

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Second-rate pancakes are as common as the oversized, tasteless muffins one buys at diners and overrated coffee shops. I wanted my pancakes to be light, easy to make, and also adaptable to fruit variations such as blueberries.

The first problem with most pancake recipes is that they use milk instead of buttermilk. This produces a thin pancake because buttermilk is a wonderful thickener – the huge amount of lactic acid in buttermilk reacts with baking soda to provide a lot of lift and fluff. With that basic ingredient out of the way, I then noticed that most pancake recipes use too much leavener – up to a tablespoon of baking powder and/or soda – and this produces a soapy flavor and also results in thinner pancakes since they collapse on themselves towards the end of cooking due to an excess amount of lift. I finally decided to use 1/4 teaspoon baking soda and a 1/2 teaspoon of baking powder. I found that a combination of soda and powder was best since batter made with just soda tended to fizzle out by the time the last pancake was made; double-acting baking powder reserves some of its leavening activity until it comes in contact with heat unlike baking soda which reacts immediately with acid.

Now I had a basic recipe using 2 cups of flour, baking powder and soda, 2 cups of buttermilk, salt, eggs, and possibly sugar and melted butter. I found that mixing buttermilk and a small amount of milk was best – this produces a batter that is pourable yet thick enough to produce a fluffy cake. I finally settled on 1 2/3 cups buttermilk to 1/3 cup milk. Two eggs is standard in pancake recipes – I tested one and three eggs with disappointing results. (If one separates the eggs and beats the whites, one produces an extremely light pancake. See the variation after the recipe.) Although I tend not to use melted butter in my pancakes, I found that this ingredient did add flavor and make the pancakes a bit more tender. Adding the melted butter towards the end of mixing worked fine. (If one adds it to the cold mix, it will seize up although it will melt again during cooking.) Two teaspoons of sugar perked up the flavor as did 1/2 teaspoon of table salt (or one full teaspoon of kosher salt).

Most folks go off the rails when they mix pancakes. The simple rule is use a light hand and undermix instead of overmix. This is not a cake batter. Simply pour the wet ingredients into the dry, gently fold the batter until about half-mixed, add the melted butter, and fold or stir very gently for just a few seconds until the batter is thick and relatively lump free. (A few small lumps are okay – the batter should not be totally smooth.) The other issue is the griddle or skillet. Every griddle is different so settings are irrelevant. You want a medium-high heat so that the exterior of the pancake does not overcook by the time the interior is cooked through. I use 1/3 cup of batter for each pancake – leave plenty of room between them. This recipe can be doubled for larger crowds.

PERFECT PANCAKES

I prefer to beat the egg whites separately and then fold them into the batter after it is half-mixed and the butter has been added. Remember to use a very light hand when mixing – a few lumps in the batter is just fine. If you have problems with the pancakes sticking to the griddle, use paper towels to coat with a thin layer of vegetable oil (do not use corn oil which is sticky) before cooking the pancakes.

2 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons sugar
1/4 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1 2/3 cups buttermilk
1/3 cup whole milk
2 eggs
3 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted

1. Heat a seasoned griddle or skillet. Whisk dry ingredients in a medium bowl. Whisk the buttermilk, milk, and eggs together in a small bowl or large measuring cup. Pour this buttermilk mixture into the dry ingredients and gently fold/mix until about half combined – there should still be large streaks of flour. Add the melted butter and gently fold/mix until combined. Small lumps in the batter are okay – do NOT overmix!

2. Pour 1/3 cup of batter onto the heated griddle for each pancake, spacing them well apart. Cook until several large bubbles appear on the batter surface. Turn and cook until the underside is medium brown. Repeat with remaining batter. It is best to serve pancakes as soon as they are cooked.

Serves 4

BLUEBERRY VARIATION

Pick over, rinse, and then dry one cup of blueberries. Scatter a small handful over each pancake after they are first poured onto the skillet.

EXTRA-FLUFFY PANCAKES

Separate the eggs. Whisk the yolks with the buttermilk and milk. In a separate bowl, beat the whites to 2-inch peaks – they should still be very soft and moist. Gently fold in the beaten whites to the batter after the melted butter has been added.

that the Lovin' Spoonful actually had its roots as a jug band," said Sebastian from his home in Woodstock, New York. "So many listeners identify the band with its mid-60s hits, which were mainly Beatles-influenced rock and pop. But one of our biggest hits, 'Daydream,' was actually a jug-band style song, or as close to one as ever hit the Top 40 in the mid 60s. But if that wasn't genuine enough, the B-side of our single 'Do You Believe In Magic,' a song called 'On the Road Again,' was a bona fide jug-band song."

The title of the J Band disc is named for and also a reverent tribute to jug-band pioneer Gus Cannon, a singer/guitarist/songwriter who became legendary as the hard-living leader of the influential Memphis band, the Jug Stompers, during the jug-band dance-hall craze of the 1920s. Among other song chestnuts, Cannon is known for having written and performed the original "Walk Right In," revived by the Rooftop Singers many years later in the early 60s, and several songs which were remade even later on by the Grateful Dead, "Minglewood Blues," "Cumberland Blues" and "Viola Lee Blues."

Vivino was also Sebastian's main collaborator on the Chasin' Gus' Ghost disc, having co-produced and played one instrument or another on all the tracks. The disc also featured special guest J Band members Paul Rishell and Annie Raines, who are Boston area favorites in their own right as a folk-blues vocal/guitar/harmonica duo.

"Jimmy (Vivino) is a very dedicated guy, working five days a week with the Conan O'Brien show and playing as many sessions as he does with other performers the rest of his time. I feel very lucky to have him," Sebastian said. "I met him when we were both playing in Laura Nyro's band in New York a few years back. And we've played together in bands with Johnnie Johnson, who was the pianist in Chuck Berry's band, and Felix Cavaliere, who was the lead singer with the Rascals. Jimmy is sort of part of that African-American and Italian blues connection in the music scene."

"Onstage, both Jimmy and I can move around very easily between all the different instruments needed to play in the jug-band style. We switch around from everything harmonicas, guitars, 6-string banjos, electric mandolins and baritone guitars to washboards, washtubs and syrup jugs. And we play a cross-section of old, traditional jug-band material and newer songs in the style, some written by us. We'll even toss in a few old Spoonful tunes if we sense that the audience is going that way," Sebastian said.

Other live music at Heritage Days includes a Friday afternoon Local Music Celebration featuring the Marshalls, Scituate's own Irresponsibles and the John Harris Band. All Festival events take place on Front Street and the waterfront.

Grow glorious grasses for year-round beauty

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the month of July draws to a close, the perennial borders initiate yet another wave of colorful blossoms. Purple and white balloon flowers (Platycodon), Joe-Pye-Weed (Eupatorium), black-eyed Susans (Rudbeckia), multi-colored tall garden phloxes, and cardinal flowers (Lobelia cardinalis) join the floral parade as many of our early summer blooms begin to fade. Perennial garden design poses many challenges as we endeavor to create the illusion of continuous bloom, but the ever-changing palette throughout the growing season is well worth the research and constant relocation of plants required to achieve this elusive goal.

Nearly every day in the summer perennial border presents a unique portrait with peaks and valleys in the bloom sequence. A diversity of attractive foliages serves to bridge the gaps and acts as the primary player throughout the growing season. A few plants have the good fortune to display leaves that are tinted blue, gray, gold and burgundy. Others provide lacy, dissected leaves including Russian sage (Perovskia), members of the threadleaf coreopsis family (Coreopsis verticillata) and ferns. The large majority of these plants, however, tend to exhibit fairly similar patterns having rounded leaves and dense, solid forms. The addition of finely textured, linear foliage is a welcome contrast and few plants rival the ornamental grasses for this attractive attribute.

Ornamental grasses are slowly becoming accepted as worthy additions to the landscape. For many gardeners, however, there is still reluctance to use these versatile plants. Some fear they will spread rampantly. After all, lawn and meadow grasses are often one of our most invasive and challenging weeds in the borders. Perhaps, like myself, you innocently introduced ribbon grass (Phalaris) into your plantings years ago only to watch it systematically take over the garden. Even more difficult for some to accept is the lack of showy, colorful blossoms, the basis on which many gardeners make their acquisitions.

There is an inexplicable attraction to these simple plants, however, that is gradually winning over even the most reluctant dirt-diggers. English author, Nigel Taylor, in his book Ornamental Grasses, seems to express it best when he comments that their "impact is both visual and auditory, especially in the case of the medium and larger grasses, evoking the sights and sounds of wide open spaces, a mysterious synthesis of the wild and the serene." In recent years, landscapers have discovered their many positive attributes including low maintenance, hardiness and multi-season interest and many commercial plantings display attractive groupings of grasses. Their growing presence is bringing hesitant gardeners into the nurseries to give them a try.

The term, "ornamental grass" is currently applied to a wide range of plants including true grasses, sedges and rushes, most of which share similar characteristics in that they demonstrate linear leaves and do not produce brightly colored floral displays. There are grasses to suit nearly every cultural condition including sun or shade, wet or dry. There are a few that are evergreen and still others that offer pleasing winter interest. Add to this adaptability a wonderful diversity of foliage colors, including varying shades of green, yellow, blue, burgundy and variegated varieties, and forms ranging from low prostrate clumpers to 12-foot tall arching specimens, and the stage is set for a spectacular array of low maintenance plants to provide an appealing contrast to adjacent perennials or shrubs.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JULY 31

Take it slow and easy this morning. Don't overdo or overextend. Know your limits. The Aries moon aligns with Jupiter at 11:48 a.m. and becomes inactive. Planetary influences turn around completely at 12:17 p.m., when the moon enters stable Taurus. This is a wonderful afternoon for working in your garden or developing creative projects. Put important signings or decisions on hold for a few days. Get extra rest tonight.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1

The planet Jupiter enters Leo today, a clear signal that this is a month to concentrate on relaxing and enjoying life to the fullest. The last quarter phase of the moon arrives at 6:22 a.m. This moon will decrease in light until August 8, when the Leo new moon occurs. In the morning the moon aligns with Neptune, and a sun/Neptune polarity occurs this evening. Don't take anything too seriously. Kick back and mellow out completely.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 2

A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Saturn impacts the morning. Financial, investment or property issues can no longer be swept under the rug. Now is the time to work out a plan or budget in order to attain long-term goals. Potentially difficult influences begin to ease up this afternoon, when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Venus. At 6:58 p.m. the Taurus moon becomes inactive until 11:46 p.m., when it enters Gemini.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 3

Take advantage of above-average planetary influences this morning, and launch ventures, promote ideas, sign contracts. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Saturn aids focus and concentration. You can be most productive. Plan to get new projects off the ground before 12:11 p.m., when this Mercury/Saturn alignment occurs. The remainder of the day and evening rates high for fun and games. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 4

Take a vacation from routine and responsibilities today. Follow your bliss. The Gemini moon generates a social, outgoing mood. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, opposes Uranus at 6:58 p.m. Avoid rigid time schedules or plans; be more spontaneous. Put major decisions, purchases or commitments on hold. A lunar alignment to Saturn at 11:28 p.m., warns you to choose your words carefully; know when it's time to call it a night.

MONDAY, AUGUST 5

This week tops the charts for vacationing. Postpone beginning important enterprises until Thursday afternoon, when the new moon occurs. Today the Gemini moon becomes inactive at 4:42 a.m. The moon enters Cancer at 8:02 a.m. and immediately becomes inactive, because it will not interact with a planet while it travels in Cancer. That means that the next two and one-half days are prime for tackling odd jobs or unfinished projects around the home. Mars and Pluto align at 9:54 p.m., intensifying passions and emotions. Steer clear of impulsive actions. Lighten up, mellow out.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 6

Make up a list of things to do and stick with it. You can get a lot accomplished today. New starts are off limits. Instead, clean and reorganize, make repairs or renovations; handle routine chores and errands. The planet Mercury enters Virgo at 5:51 a.m., remaining there until August 26. Share a special dinner with loved ones; give extra time and attention to children or pets. Be more nurturing and sensitive to the needs of others.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7

The planet Venus enters Libra at 5:09 a.m., remaining there until September 7. The combination of an inactive Cancer moon and sun/Pluto alignment makes this morning prime for tackling projects that need redoing, refinishing, repair. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 12:27 p.m., when the moon enters Leo. Lunar alignments to Venus and Jupiter generate a lighter, brighter mood. Take some soul time today. Meditate, play music, create art or appreciate nature.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8

The dark side of a new moon brings a time for inner reflection, rest and solitude. Others may be feeling agitated, depressed. Don't overpersonalize. Take it slow and easy this morning. The new moon culminates at 3:15 p.m., 16-degrees of the sign Leo. At 4:26 p.m. the moon aligns with Mars, warning you maintain a cool, calm demeanor. The green light for new starts goes on at 4:30 p.m. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Jupiter makes this evening prime for social and romantic activities.

Eagle soars on Turkey Hill

Project creates new visitor center

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

Of the millions of young boys who participate in Boy Scout troops across the country, just 4 percent of them ever reach the prestigious rank of Eagle Scout, the most advanced level of scouting.

Connor Avery, a recent graduate of Cohasset High School, is about to join the more than 1 million Boy Scouts since 1911 to earn this rank, according to the Boy Scouts of America web site.

To become an Eagle Scout, Avery said he had to earn 21 merit badges, hold a leadership position in his troop and organize and participate in a service project.

For this project, he turned a former missile base building on Turkey Hill into a visitor center/rest stop for hikers passing through the area. Avery said he got the idea from his father, Richard Avery, who is involved with the Turkey Hill Management Committee.

The Eagle Scout guidelines required Avery to organize the project by himself, including raising all the necessary money. He therefore wrote letters to local organizations, such as the garden and Rotary clubs, asking for funds while Cohasset Hardware donated materials to Avery's project.

Also, 75 hours of physical labor were required to be completed for the project. Avery said he was lucky to have plenty of help from scouts in Cohasset and their parents.

"I organized the project and got to tell people what to do," he said.

To restore the structure, Avery and his volunteers painted the building, repaired walls and planted grass. They also dug a path around the perimeter of the new visitor's center and placed benches that they had built in and around the building.

With many young Boy Scouts becoming uninvolved with their troops as they get older, 18-year-old Avery said he has remained interested in scouting because of the support from his friends and family. Two of his uncles are Eagle Scouts, as well.

Avery, who will attend the University of Vermont to study physics, said being an Eagle Scout will help him throughout his life.

"It will help out later when I'm trying to get a job," Avery said. "Through the project I learned how to organize and fundraise."

Famous Eagle Scouts include former President Gerald R. Ford, Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld and H. Ross Perot.

Scituate boat service has a Cohasset hook

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

Rick Railsback calls himself an old "harbor rat" from his days of growing up and working on Cohasset Harbor. Thirty years ago he and Scituate native Steve Ward talked about being in a harbor-related business.

Today, it is a reality.

Railsback and Ward, along with their wives — Page and Judy — are the new owners of EZ Rider Launch Service in Scituate harbor, and they couldn't be happier to be back on the water.

"As an adult, working in the city (Boston), I haven't been able to get enough water time," said Railsback, who is now a North Marshfield resident. "This was a great opportunity for us that came along at the right time."

Steve and Judy Ward, the owners of Cohasset Diesel and Gas have serviced the EZ Rider boat for the 22 years former owner Michael Vazquez ran the service. And when the time came for Vazquez to sell the business, they jumped at the chance.

"We figured it might be neat to run the service after working with them for so long," Judy said, who also grew-up in Scituate. "It's going to be a fun thing for us."

The two couples purchased the launch service in early May just before the official boating season got underway. Cedar Point and EZ Rider are the only boat launch services in Scituate Harbor for boat users not belonging to a private club. Through the service, mariners pay a fee and get a lift via the EZ Rider boat from the pier to their vessels.

Rick said the harbor has always been a "sweet spot" for him — growing up he drove his first outbound boat when he was 8 years old. As a teenager he drove the Cohasset Police Department's all-night harbor patrol, and taught sailing on the harbor for two summers. It was never a problem finding water time when he was growing-up, and hopes this new endeavor will allow him to scratch his "salt water itch."

"I feel like I'm the caretaker for a long-standing harbor tradition," Rick said. "This is a dream come true for me."

Visitors to the harbor, as well as water lovers without access to a boat will have the opportunity to enjoy the harbor in a new way with EZ Rider. Judy said the launch service will offer a ride around the harbor for $10 any time the service is not in use.

The group is especially excited about this because it will bring new faces to the harbor, and allow more people to enjoy the season, Judy said.

"It's just something new we'll be trying," she said. "So far we've gotten a good response — we're all excited about the possibilities."

But the EZ Rider service isn't changing much else. Four veteran drivers will return for the season, as well as three new members to the team. Rick said all the drivers have a very local connection and really know the area.

"These guys love what they do," he said. "And they do it so much better than I ever could."

But Rick is still relishing his newest enterprise — especially since it brings him back to the ocean. And there's nothing better than taking over a Scituate tradition more than two decades old.

"As a team we'll bring a fresh level of energy and commitment to the harbor," he said. "We are thrilled to be a part of this."

The cost for a season's pass to EZ Rider is $10 per foot for each boat, with a minimum cost of $250. The service is also available for $5 per single use.

Avalon to phase project in

Permit filing is expected this week

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The developer behind a proposed 254-unit, luxury apartment complex off Route 3A that would include some affordably priced apartments was expected to file for a comprehensive permit at Town Hall this week.

AvalonBay Communities plans to split the $43 million project into two phases to comply with changes in Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, said William McLaughlin, regional vice president of development with Avalon.

"The first phase will be larger to cover the up-front costs," McLaughlin said Monday. Avalon will apply for a comprehensive permit for each phase, he said.

If granted, comprehensive permits allow developers to skirt some local zoning laws in exchange for providing a percentage of affordable housing. For example, the 62-acre parcel, where the Avalon development is proposed, is zoned for industrial-technology, not residential use. So the only way residential housing would be allowed – save Town Meeting action to change the zoning – is through a comprehensive permit.

Recent changes in the law put a cap on the total number of units a town has to absorb at one time. In the case of Cohasset that would be about 150. The statute — Mass. General Laws Chapter 40B — sets a 10 percent goal of affordable housing for each community. Cohasset has about 3 percent or about 76 units of affordable housing in town.

Scituate resident provides battle plan

By Mary Ford

Although the Red Coats had already left, a local Minuteman made an appearance in Cohasset Monday to muster the troops for a Revolutionary War era-style revolt.

Lou Chin, a Scituate resident — who is an abutter to a proposed 28-unit, 40B project dubbed Walden Woods — provided the fledgling group of Cohasset anti-40B activists with enough ammunition to wage a battle.

"This is similar to the Boston Tea Party that threw tea into the sea," he told the gathering of about 15 people, urging them to take matters into their own hands.

Cheap day at the beach could end

Increase in fees, towing mulled

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Too many non-residents are using the town parking lot at Sandy Beach.

Robin Lawrence, president of the Sandy Beach Association, said the $25 fine for not having a town beach sticker is not enough of a deterrent to keep non-residents away.

"It's far too little to dissuade people from parking there," said Lawrence, who pointed out the town controls the parking lot.

He explained with the current ticket fee, five people can pile into a car and for $5 a piece have a great day at the beach.

Lawrence suggested the fine be increased, the town consider towing cars, or hire a part-time employee to man the entrance on weekend and holidays.

"It's far too little to dissuade people from parking there."
— Robin Lawrence, Sandy Beach Association

He said the most complaints the Sandy Beach Association receives is about the parking lot. Residents ask why it is full of people "who don't belong here," he said.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan was cool to the idea of towing and thought a part-time person would be better.

Selectmen tabled the matter that will be placed on a future agenda.

Lightning gives sewers a jolt

Control panels get zapped

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

From an early age people are taught to fear lightning.

At the first sign of the fast-moving black clouds, Little League games are cancelled and beachgoers hurriedly gather their belongings as everyone heads for shelter.

This healthy fear is even more prevalent in coastal towns like Cohasset, where thunderstorms are a summer ritual. From power outages, to downed trees, to the potential lethality of a direct strike on a human being, one would think that citizens had their bases covered in terms of prevention.

Not so.

Last month, mother nature got a bit creative, whirling up a lightning storm that burned out 80 of the new sewerage control panels installed in North Cohasset.

According to the manufacturer of the equipment, the reason for the burnout was inadequate grounding on the part of the individual houses. While the national standard for homes requires a grounding rod to be buried in the earth, Cohasset code requires only that a resident be grounded to the water main. One-hundred-and-twenty units were affected by the strike, but the 80 units that were destroyed needed to be replaced, which took time because of a parts shortage with the manufacturer.

"The manufacturer shipped us the part and they arrived on Monday," said Sean Cunning, of the sewer commission. "We're installing Jack Buckley has just passed the final exam.

The popular high school teacher is the impetus behind a new concept for the former Hagerty house on Parker Avenue: the Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research that would provide a harbor-front facility for students engaged in coastal research projects.

Ten months ago he floated plans for a maritime educational facility at the site to a skeptical Board of Selectmen that didn't want to turn the town-owned building that needs considerable work over to another non-profit who may or may not make it.

"It's a great proposal."
— Selectman Merle Brown

Buckley was back in the spring but selectmen told him to come back again with specifics including a detailed financial plan.

Tuesday night he had the goods.

"It's a great proposal," said Selectman Merle Brown.

Selectmen authorized Town Manager Mark Haddad to issue an RFP (Request for Proposal), as required by state law, for the project that would be targeted toward a non-profit maritime educational center.

They also authorized spending $25,000 from leftover monies in the

Spindrift Lane signs sought

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a resident of Spindrift Lane asked selectmen to consider installing signs saying parking on the lane is for residents of that street only. Apparently, Black Rock beach-goers are using the lane for parking. Before Haddad takes any action, however, selectmen asked him to check with Police Chief Bob Jackson to get his opinion on the matter, because it might require some enforcement. Also, Selectman Merle Brown asked Haddad to research if Spindrift Lane is a private way.

Bicycle jumping causes near miss

In addition to jumping off the Border Street bridge, local youths are riding their bicycles off Lawrence Wharf into the harbor.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a resident, who was in a dingy in the harbor, said a bike missed her by inches.

"The bike almost took her out," Haddad said.

Haddad said he talked to Police Chief Robert Jackson, who suggested installing granite posts that would be connected by black chain link around the perimeter of the wharf to discourage jumpers. Haddad said the fence would look very nautical.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, who supported the concept, said he has always been concerned at low tide because of the danger there with no fence.

But Selectman Ronnie McMorris said it was an issue of parental supervision.

Haddad will check with DPW Supt. Carl Sestito on the pricing and also check with the Harbor Committee, before bringing the issue back to selectmen.

Greenbush notebook

The selectmen's office is keeping a Greenbush notebook containing the town's mitigation agreement with the MBTA, selectmen's meeting minutes and all train correspondence for members of the public who want to review it.

"It will be all here for them," Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Wastewater Committee

The town has a new 10-member Wastewater Committee that includes four town officials and citizens who will represent the following areas: Brewster Road district, Beechwood, Little Harbor, Forest Avenue (West Corner), South Main Street and Sohier/Fairoaks/Rose Hill.

The committee will make recommendations to the selectmen, the Growth and Development Task Force and Town Meeting relating to wastewater issues in Town. The committee will also coordinate efforts with the development of the town's Master Plan.

Selectman Tom Callahan stressed the importance of connecting with town planning.

"You can't deal with sewering in isolation, it has other ramifications," he said.

Selectman Merle Brown plans to ask people to apply but interested citizens can also call Brown or the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

Red Lion hearing

Selectmen continued the hearing on the "change of premises" request at the Red Lion Inn until Sept. 10 to allow more time for the inn and abutters to resolve some of the issues raised at the initial hearing. The inn has asked for patio dining and more tables in the room off the main lobby.

Graduation date

After much adieu, the 2003 high school graduation date has been rescheduled for its original date and time on Saturday, June 7at 1:30 p.m. Principal Michael Jones initially wanted to change the date to Friday June 6, at 6 p.m. in order to avoid conflict with the state track meet. After some negative feedback, Jones mailed home a survey to parents for comment. Twenty-four of the 81 surveys were returned, with mixed results. After a lengthy discussion, School Committee chairman Richard Flynn made a motion to return the graduation to Saturday afternoon in order to accommodate those who had already made plans for that day. The motion passed unanimously at last week's School Committee meeting.

Accreditation visit

Principal Michael Jones announced preliminary plans for the Accreditation Committee's work schedule. Schools are required to undergo re-accreditation every 10 years. The visiting committee will be at the high school from Sep. 29-Oct. 2, 2002, and will judge the school on how well it meets seven learning standards. The seven standards are Mission and Expectation for Student learning, Curriculum, Instruction, Assessment of Student Learning, Leadership and Organization, School Resources for Learning, and Community Resources for Learning.

Committee vacancies

Vacancies currently exist on several town committees. Anyone interested in serving should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105, or stop by the office on the second floor of Town Hall.

Cupola installment

George Cooney took these drive-by photos of the new cupola atop the old Osgood School, where the new Paul Pratt Library will be housed. Sheila Evans of the library trustees said there was a cupola base atop the old 1929 school building that apparently had never been used. The old base, however, wasn't strong enough to hold the new cupola.

School bus service is up for grabs

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The School Department will once again put the busing contract out to bid, after its initial offering generated no response.

Ten companies took out papers on the bid, but none chose to make an offer, leading Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey to believe that the initial document may have been confusing. The new document will make it clear that potential bidders were not required to use the town's bus fleet.

Malvey hastened to assure the schoolchildren of Cohasset that bus service will be in place in time for the start of school.

"We'll be able to make separate arrangements with a bus contractor, and/or provide some of our own service by hiring drivers," said Malvey. "I would prefer to have this all wrapped up, but it's not going to slow us down."

Two years ago, the School Department opted to contract out the bus service using the town-owned vehicles to Hanover-based Ingle Bus Service. Owner Stephen Ingle decided not to renew the contract, unless he could use his own vehicles.

Ingle was concerned over the lack of an official contract outside of the bid itself, as well as insurance and maintenance issues.

"I felt that the liability on my part was extremely high," said Ingle. "We didn't have a contract for pay, though I did receive payment, and we never had a contract in writing as required by law. It made me uncomfortable."

Malvey says bus service will be in place in time for the start of school.

Malvey maintained that the bid itself served as the contract and noted that these concerns were old news.

"These issues all were resolved well over a year ago," said Malvey. "So there is no need to get into it. Everything was taken care of. In effect the bid was the contract. At one point in time, because the town switched insurance, one of the vehicles slipped off the roster, but it was taken care of immediately once we were informed of that."

Malvey also noted that it is the town's responsibility to insure the vehicles.

Ingle took out papers during this year's bidding process, but after discussions with Malvey, decided not to place a bid.

"I was intending to, but the specifications required the bid to be turned in by July 24, and to have the buses in place by Aug. 1.," said Ingle. "It also reserved the right to not award the contract for up to 45 days which would be after school started. I didn't want them coming to me and saying 'Oh, by the way, we want you to cover the route in September.'"

Ingle was also concerned whether a bid to use his own vehicles would be accepted.

"They said they weren't in the position to give up their buses at this time," said Ingle. "Even if I had submitted a bid to run my own buses, they would not award that to me. They'd either run it in-house or give the contract to someone willing to run their buses."

Malvey said that his position was misunderstood.

"At the time, we were not in the position to accept that kind of offer," said Malvey. "But that doesn't mean that we wouldn't accept it categorically."

As for the 45-day window to award the contract, Malvey again said that the department's position was being misinterpreted..

"It just meant we had a little more breathing space," said Malvey. "If a bid were to work out such that it was acceptable to us, we would move forward and certainly and not wait the 45 days."

Despite the disagreements, Ingle did say that he would possibly be interested in resuming his relationship with Cohasset next year if he were able to provide his own vehicles. As for this year, he said it was just too late.

"I kind of feel at this point, as I led them to believe back in December, that they shouldn't wait too long to put this out there and they ended up doing that," said Ingle. "They are not going to find someone to come back in and run there buses at this point."

Local Logan runway fight still flies

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

It appears that final Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) approval of a new runway at Logan Airport will be met with a court challenge.

"We're going to be fighting this in the legal arena," said State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. "It's the only avenue left now that Massport and the FAA have signed off on the project."

The FAA is limiting the runway's use to times when winds from the northwest or southeast exceed 10 knots per hour (11.5 mph), which causes delays on other runways, with penalties imposed if that stipulation isn't followed.

However, runway opponents remain firm that the negative impacts far outweigh any benefits. The fight is clearly not over yet on a number of fronts.

Massport says the new Runway 1432 will reduce delays, but project opponents — including the South Shore Jet Pollution and Hingham Jet Noise task forces — plan to continue their opposition based on concerns related to jet noise and pollution and the expected tripling of flights over the South Shore.

There are also two lawsuits for runway supporters to deal with – one filed in Suffolk Superior Court to lift a 1976 injunction blocking construction of a new runway and the other filed in Plymouth County by Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, and Revere challenging Massport's environmental findings.

Bradley, Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and other legislators, along with a number of communities which will be affected by the runway, want to halt the project.

The FAA, on the other hand, claims air traffic congestion would be relieved by the construction of the new runway.

The 35-page FAA report related to the runway decision also requires airplanes using the new runway to maximize the use of airspace over Boston Harbor; stipulates that Massport create a "peak period pricing" system which would charge more to airlines using Logan Airport during the busiest times; and provides a plan to help lessen the pressure on Logan by using more regional airports.

Residents bothered by jet noise may register their complaints and request a copy be sent to their home at (617) 561-3333. They may also log onto the South Shore Jet Pollution's web page at www.southshorejet-pollution.org,

Hingham has already appropriated $178,500 to fight the project, and Cohasset has contributed $78,500 for the same purpose.

Calm waters for Coastal Research Center

Hagerty account to go toward installing public bathrooms on the southwest corner of the first floor of the building that could be used by visitors to Mariner's Park.

Buckley has planned a "renovation budget" of $100,000. The Center has about $27,000 on hand, including money from a fund-raiser Monday and has established a credit line to cover the balance while an aggressive fundraising campaign is launched.

Plans are to sub-lease the upper floors to the South Shore Art Center for studio space.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan liked the fact the Coastal Research Center would have some lease revenue coming in.

Not everyone in attendance was a fan, however. Hagerty Committee chairman Russ Bonetti asked selectmen to hold off making a decision until they consulted with the Hagerty Committee. He also said there were construction problems at Mariner's Park that needed fixing and warned the town might need the leftover Hagerty funds for that purpose. The town bought the two-plus acre Hagerty site in the early 1990s for passive recreation and to provide more public access to the harbor.

Haddad explained there would still be $21,000 remaining in the Hagerty account to cover the work and install benches and tables at the park. Still, Sullivan wanted to know what the potential expenses might be.

While Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she appreciated Bonetti's concerns, she stressed the importance of seeing progress on the building.

"We're intent on making the building equal to any property on the street," Buckley promised.

Selectmen did agree with Bonetti that parking is an issue and planned to write some restrictions into the lease agreement. Mariner's Park was created for town use and the parking there is limited. There is available parking on Government Island that the Coastal Center could use on peak summer days, selectmen said. Government Island is connected to Mariner's Park via a walkway.

Buckley is asking for a five-year lease at $1 a year with an option to renew. The building would house a classroom, science lab, computer lab, conference/meeting center and artist studios.

The Hagerty building has been in limbo for some time. The site was leased to the Lobster Lab, which was unable to realize its potential in the space. Selectmen terminated the Lab's lease of the building because the non-profit organization did not meet the conditions of the lease in terms of building upkeep and fund-raising.

Wellspring, League join forces on domestic violence

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Domestic violence is an ugly issue.

Initiated in private and propagated by silence, it knows no boundaries, socio-economic or otherwise.

The town of Cohasset, through the Social Service League, is cognizant of this and continues to take pro-active steps to provide more and varied options for victims of domestic violence.

The league has been a staple of the community for more than 90 years. Initially, the league focused on elder care, but over the years has branched out to other areas.

Recently, the league has realigned itself with Wellspring Multi Service Center in Hull, in order to offer victims of domestic abuse another option for counseling and help.

"We are collaborating with (Wellspring), supplementing Pat Martin's salary one day a week by giving them a grant on a quarterly basis," said Administrative Director Don Ivas. "The number one reason is that I am a male and I direct the programs. I think women feel more comfortable talking to other women about this issue. Also, it protects the woman's anonymity, by going out of town for domestic violence services."

PHOTOS /LYNNE LAYMAN

Pat Martin and Don Ivas talk about the problem of domestic violence.

Aside from her duties as a member of the Cohasset school committee, Martin is a part-time domestic violence counselor at Wellspring.

"We're kind of a one-stop shopping place," said Martin. "People come in with problems and we try to get them back on their feet."

Wellspring offers an emergency food pantry and a thrift shop, as well as connections to free legal advice, housing options, and counseling. Five years ago, the staff noticed a link between the women at the shelter and domestic violence and started a program to deal with the issue specifically. The program is growing as people find out about it, but many in Cohasset are unaware of the facility and the programs it offers.

"Most people don't know about us," said Martin. "They assume that domestic violence doesn't happen in Cohasset."

It does, according to domestic violence police officer Lisa Matos, and probably at numbers that would surprise people.

"There are a lot of family issues in town," said Matos. "Not all of them are documented because they come in as 911-hangup calls or disturbances. Not every one is called domestic violence."

Matos was quick to point out that domestic violence doesn't always fit the traditional model.

"Everyone just thinks of battered wives," said Matos. "People don't realize that it could be a problem between a mother and son or two older siblings. It may not necessarily be between a husband and a wife."

Matos and the rest of the department are quick to refer people they encounter who they feel could benefit from the services of the league or Wellspring.

"Any time we can refer someone to a social worker is a blessing for us," said Matos. "At least now we can leave a contact number for someone who can help."

Finding the courage to seek help is one of the major hindrances to leaving abusive situations.

"The unique thing of the new relationship is that now they can see Cohasset women in Hull," said Martin. "That way the women don't have to worry about running into a neighbor at the church, they can come to Hull."

There are stringent privacy rules in place that go as far as to dictate how Martin would react to seeing someone she had counseled in the supermarket.

Domestic violence officer Lisa Matos; Pat Martin who is Wellspring's domestic violence counselor; Don Ivas, Social Service League director; and Amy Cutler, president of the Social Service League at the League offices in St. Stephen's Church.

Another major issue is the financial problems that often result from leaving an abusive situation.

"We have women who may be getting some support," said Ivas. "They don't fall below the poverty line, and it's really hard to find housing for them."

This is an area where the expanded services that Wellspring offers come into play.

"Wellspring is more of a referral agency," said Ivas. "They have more at their disposal as far as the domestic violence services, free legal aid, as well as quite an extensive housing list."

The league offers some of these same services, but the Wellspring resources are more comprehensive.

"I think it is good for both the agency and the victims," said Martin. "We live on people's generosity. It's important (people know about Wellspring) so that number one, they know what we do and number two, when they see us asking for money, they know it is a good cause."

Lightning zaps 80 Cohasset sewer control panels them now, about 80 of them. We have also approved $18,000 for grounding these units around town. The manufacturer said that should solve the problem."

The sewer system is unique in that it does not rely on gravity. Sewerage is stored in a tank that holds up to 100 gallons on the individual property which when full, is pumped out of the reservoir to a pumping station. When the units failed, it was necessary to go outside and manually press the button to empty the tank.

Marilyn Pitchford wrote a letter to the sewer commission on July 22, outlining her concerns with the system. Since then, however, she feels that her concerns have been addressed, and she is happy with the progress the town is making.

"I think that the conclusion for as far as what my problem was and probably a lot of the homes was that the electrical grounding was just not adequate for the highly electrical nature of the pump unit," said Pitchford.

Others, though, have had troubles with the system from the beginning.

"It's my opinion that they used the wrong technology," said Joan Jensen of 63 Howe Road. "It's just a faulty system all the way through. Every couple of weeks the control panel goes out of whack and you have to call Rosano-Davis and they have to come out and tweak it. Then it will work for a couple of weeks. I don't know why it is happening, but it is a pain in the neck."

Rosano-Davis is the waste company overseeing the operation of the pumps and responded to more than 100 calls during the outages.

"I'll be most pleased if this is the last we hear of the problem," said Ross Rosano, one of the companies partners.

Jeff Garbarini of 51 Howe has also had problems prior to the lightning strike.

"This thing has been going on since about April," said Garbarini. "It has nothing to do with the lightning."

Garbarini has had problems with the system constantly blowing its circuit breaker as well as prbblems with backups in the storage tank.

"I think that they have probably chosen equipment that hasn't been tested and no one really checked it out," said Garbarini. "We are like guinea pigs."

Cunning defended the technology and said he felt confident that the upgrade of the grounding systems at each home – at the cost of the town – would solve the problem. If not, the town has the appropriate safeguards in place.

"The pumps and machines come with a 10-year warranty," said Cunning. "(Another pump we had to choose from) was lower end and a more proven one, but this one is higher end and we can eventually monitor it by telephone. It's a little bit more sophisticated, but it comes with a better warranty."

The town is looking into whether the damaged pumps are covered under warranty or whether they would be covered under the $1.16 million the manufacturer, Interon, had to put up to cover maintenance fees.

No one at Interon was available for comment.

"The panels are very expensive," said Cunning. "They are the property of the town, and insurance, warranty or the maintenance bond may come into play."

Pitchford, who was originally angered by the problems, pointed out that the lightning strike was a freak incident.

"This could have happened with the other manufacturer as well," said Pitchford. "These pumps are better pumps, with a better warranty, and the town got a good deal on them. I think that both the electrician and Rosano-Davis are confident that this will solve the problem."

Golf classic to benefit historic church

More than 100 golfers are expected to compete for up to $100,000 in cash prizes at the 2002 Panagia Golf Classic, Monday, Aug. 26. The 8:30 a.m. shotgun start at Widow's Walk Golf Course in Scituate will be followed by luncheon at the Barker Tavern. The second annual event will benefit the new community center of the historic Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church on Jerusalem Road in Cohasset.

The church was built in 1895-1900 by Col. Alfred Pope, in memory of his son Alexander, and designed in the Richardson style, as was Boston's Trinity Church in Copley Square. The new center, designed by Gaffney Associates of Dennis, will complement the original church.

In 1980, the church became the place of worship for a parish of now more than 200 Greek Orthodox Christian families, now under the guidance of the Rev. John G. Maheras of Scituate. The tournament's name, "Panagia," is Greek for "Most Holy One," which refers to the Virgin Mary.

"We're aiming to break ground on the new community center Sunday, Sept. 8," said Gerry Leneweaver of Scituate, president of the church's board of stewards and tournament chairman. "The center will accommodate the ever-increasing needs of our growing parish."

In a Florida scramble, golfers will shoot in five hole-in-one contests on all of Widow's Walk's par threes. Hole-in-one prizes, among other significant prizes, will include a $75,000 boat, compliments of 3A Marine Service of Hingham. In a closest-to-the-pin shootout, golfers have a chance to win $100,000 in cash. The winner of the longest drive will try to sink a 50-foot putt for $2,500.

"We expect a sell-out," Leneweaver said. "Last year we had players who traveled from Pennsylvania, New York, even Texas."

Tournament fees must be paid by Aug. 12; $135 per golfer; $500 per foursome, including lunch. To register and for information on sponsorship opportunities, call 781-337-5016.

HSO concert at the Abbey

The Hingham Symphony Orchestra meets the blues in its third annual outdoor summer concert at Glastonbury Abbey on Saturday, Aug. 24 at 4:30 p.m. Members of the Hingham Symphony Chamber Players play their version of American classics alongside Norman Zamchek and Suzy Williams, known as Stormin◊Norman and Suzy, a singing/songwriting/piano playing collaboration with roots in blues, jazz, boogie-woogie and vaudeville.

Originally based in Boston, pianist Zamcheck and chanteuse Williams have played together for a quarter century, from major New York nightspots, to off-Broadway theater, network TV, and Carnegie Hall. Suzy◊s rich, timeless voice has been compared to Bessie Smith, Sophie Tucker and Billie Holiday, all of whom appear in her repertoire. She is complemented by Norman's rhythmic, barrel-house/blues based piano. Together they cover classics from the American songbook, and draw on a catalogue of more than 300 original songs.

Audience members should bring a lawn chair or blanket, and a picnic if they like. Snacks and beverages will be available for purchase. Curtain rises on 'Twelfth Night'

By Amy Lambiaso

Lorna McKenzie as "Feste", Laura O'Brien as "Olivia" and Dick Sherrell as "Sir Toby Belch" rehearse a scene for the Cohasset Drama Club's production of "Twelfth Night" to be performed this weekend at the Scituate High School Auditorium.

Standing with a FDNY hat in his hands, Joe Sullivan recalled how the country has changed since Sept. 11.

It's been a time of tragedy and great sadness, and a time of reflection, he said — one that cannot be ignored. But Sullivan has brought those feelings to an unlikely place in Scituate.

He's brought them to life on the stage through the work of William Shakespeare.

Sullivan is directing the Cohasset Dramatic Club's summer production of "Twelfth Night or What You Will" to on stage this weekend at the newly renovated Scituate High School Auditorium. And Sullivan said the timing of this play is everything.

"When I was thinking about what play to do this year I wanted to do something that really has a place in the current time," Sullivan said. "And after Sept. 11, 'Twelfth Night' was the only logical choice."

"Twelfth Night" — Shakespeare's most performed play written 400 years ago — is a story that begins in tragedy, deals with death, sadness, mistaken identity and redemption. But through it all the audience is left with a ironically humorous story line that reminds us all that life must go on, Sullivan said.

"It would be very easy to visualize one of the characters on stage holding a fireman's helmet grieving over another character's death," he said. "You have characters that grieve, and others that go out and drink beer. The audience can learn through each of the characters that life does go on."

Sullivan has been involved with the drama club since he was 14 years-old. The 1998 SHS graduate studied at the University of Massachusetts at Lowell for a few years before following his dream on stage. Now in his seventh production of Twelfth Night, Sullivan hopes to bring his experience to the club's first Shakespeare performance.

Leading a cast of 20 thespians in his first endeavor as a director, Sullivan said this production of "Twelfth Night" will be set apart from all others done before. With the help of Dave Paradice, Sullivan re-wrote the musical score for the production almost entirely to be a more modern version of the show.

The music, along with all the costumes have been given a fresh new look in keeping with current times — changes Sullivan said make the show all that more interesting and relevant.

"It's the contemporary version of a show that could have been written yesterday," he said. "That's my greatest love for Shakespeare — that he is so relevant."

Sullivan said his first taste of a Shakespearean play was while he was at UMASS Lowell and he immediately fell in love with the bard's work. Since then he has worked with and studied under some of the most well-respected and well-known actors and producers in the business.

Just last summer Sullivan was on the other side of the stage for "Twelfth Night" during the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's award-winning production of the show in Boston. And for the production this weekend, Sullivan will wear the actor's hat again as well — he appears in several scenes of the play.

"I miss the acting side to it all," Sullivan said, who has been producing plays and musicals for the past several years. "I'm excited to get back into it."

Sullivan said he plans on moving to New York City within the next year to try his hand at "making it big," and can eventually see himself teaching theater several years down the line.

"Bates Wilder (his former theater teacher) once told me that in order to give back, you have to have something to give back," he said. "And in order to do that you have to make it big — I've got to try."

"Twelfth Night" is being performed as a benefit for the Cohasset Drama Club's Technical Improvement and Scholarship Fund. Performances are Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 for adults in advance and $12 at the door. For information and reservations, call 781-544-0304.

Balloons, Ho!

Even before Dorothy took her famous journey over the rainbow in the Wizard of Oz, people have had a fascination with hot air balloons.

If you recall, Dorothy and Toto hoped to return home from Oz in a hot air balloon piloted by the wizard, but missed the flight to Kansas when Toto jumped out of the wicker gondola chasing after an errant feline of Oz., and Dorothy followed.

Those enamored by the romance of hot air balloons should be sure not to miss the Tedeschi/Li'l Peach Balloon Festival this weekend.

And they don't even need to travel "Around the World in 80 Days" to do it. The festival is right down the street, at the former South Weymouth naval Air Station.

Man's interest in hot air balloons began in France in the 1700s. The Montgolfier brothers, who owned a paper factory, were fascinated when they saw a scrap of paper fly up the chimney, propelled by the rush of hot air from a blazing hearth. They made the leap to experimenting with a small silk bag, filled with smoke that floated to the ceiling. In 1783, the brothers created a much larger balloon and sent their first passengers — a sheep, a rooster and a duck — on a flight.

The first human aerial voyage took place later that year, when Marquis d'Arlandes and Pilatre de Rozier took flight in a hot air balloon in front of an audience including the King and Queen of France.

A decade later, in 1793, an event occurred that started a tradition that still exists today.

This tradition involves sharing a glass of bubbly.

Champagne has been associated with ballooning since the first flight in America more than 200 years ago, when a Frenchman, Jean-Pierre Blanchard, took off from Philadelphia and came down on a New Jersey farm. The farmer, who spoke only German, came after the balloon with a pitchfork. Blanchard, who had brought some champagne to go with his lunch, saved his balloon from being shredded by offering his host the bottle.

Today, whenever a hot air balloon lands, the pilot offers the property owner a drink of champagne. Even if he isn't carrying a pitchfork.

Hot air flights have their dramatic as well as whimsical side.

During the early days of World War II, blimps saved American shipping along the eastern coast.

In 1941, German U-boats sank 497 American ships — tankers, freighters, other commercial ships — along the eastern seacoast. There were no more such sinkings once blimp patrols took to the skies. The crafts' claim to fame is that there was never a ship sunk while under a blimp escort.

Blimps, capable of traveling at a speed of 70 mph and able to hover at low altitudes, were the ideal watch-eagles for convoys in peril. The LOA (lighter-than-air) ships carried four 325-torpex bombs set to detonate at certain depths.

Recognizing the importance of blimps, Congress, as early as June, 1940, called for the construction of 48 new blimps. In 1942, Congress authorized the construction of 200 of the non-rigid aircraft.

In fact, the South Weymouth Naval Air Station was constructed by the Department of Defense as a blimp base.

South Weymouth neighbors of the base were familiar with the large, cigar-shaped shadows floating over their backyards in the 1940s. Children would run out of their homes to watch the blimps cruising overhead.

The summer of 1944 saw a hallmark at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station. Six blimps flew out of the base and achieved the first crossing of the Atlantic by non-rigid ships. These blimps became the first "blimp barrier" in the Mediterranean, flying anti-submarine patrols around the straits of Gibraltar.

Indeed, hot air flight has a long history at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

Perhaps it is symbolic that lighter-than-air crafts, that were the reason the South Weymouth Naval Air Station came into being, will mark the closing of the air station as well.

What a contrast!

Blimps meant business — the LOA were engaged in a life-or-death struggle over the waves of the Atlantic.

Hot air balloons mean fun.

Perhaps it is a positive sign of the future of the naval air station that the skies over the base will be filled with colorful hot air balloons. Maybe if we have a sunrise shower, there may even be a rainbow.

Perhaps this is symbolic that the decommissioned base, with the potential of becoming an economic boon to Weymouth, surrounding towns and the entire South Shore, may someday become the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Who's in charge?

This letter is being reprinted because a typesetting error in last week's issue changed its meaning.

TO THE EDITOR:

The veneer separating CRC from Peter Roy and Peter Roy's business interests became transparent at the July 9, Selectmen's meeting. At this meeting, Dean Rizzo presented the "moderate" CRC proposal. When a question asking Selectmen to evaluate the cost/benefit of widening Border Street (which requires land taking) for the sole purpose of preserving seven street parking spots was raised, response from Peter Roy was that if those parking spots were eliminated he "would sue the town."

Citizens of Cohasset should be offended. Is this the real cost of "free" planning? Who will ensure that the best interests of the town prevail in every aspect of the "revitalization" plan? Will a separate committee be established to analyze the cost/benefit of the major components of the plan? Who will make certain that the design maintains the historic feel of an Old New England Fishing Harbor and not a Victorian Landscape? Can we be assured the final plan is subject to a town vote? Who will make certain that the concerns of the harbor residents: quality of parking, noise, congestion and lighting are incorporated into the final plan?

We can only hope that the best interests of all Cohasset residents prevail, free from manipulation of the process.

Simple solution

TO THE EDITOR:

I walk every morning, early. One of my routes is Border Street to Otis Avenue and return. One of the current questions/problems facing the town in this area is Border Street — the sidewalk, parking, pedestrians, bicycles. There seems to be a very simple solution; this is my solution—nothing new, just reiterated:

- Sidewalks: Renovate/redo these with asphalt as the surface. If this requires that the wall be repaired, then do it.

Actually, no matter what surface is used the wall must be repaired.

- Curbing: Use a rolling curb with a white line as demarcation between the sidewalk and the roadway. The reasoning behind the rolling curb is so that bicyclists, walkers, walkers with strollers, and cars can, if needed get out of the way of traffic. With a granite curb, there is no "escape" route.
- Roadway: Renovate the roadway with asphalt as the surface, with "No Parking" on the opposite side of the road from the water. There are two good travel lanes along most of Border Street.
- Fence: This is an historical fence—it fits in Cohasset—the harbor walk. Renovate it. Keep it.
- Parking Signs: Signs for the entire water side of Border Street would read: "No Parking Over the Line on the Sidewalk—$50 Fine."

Bicyclists now use the roadway of Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue, Margin Street and Border Street. There is no need for a bicycle lane anywhere in Cohasset.

As I said at the start, these are not new suggestions. Just some comments from a resident who feels that Cohasset has a lot to offer anyone who chooses to live here or visit here.

Cohasset has a unique flavor—let's keep it that way.

Sewer fiasco

TO THE EDITOR:

The town's requisite sewer system on my property has given me nothing but trouble since it's installation (completed November 11, 2000). The system is very unreliable.

The present problem involves a defective part in the control panel (once again!) The grinder pump will not work unless I push a manual button twice a day to empty the tank. This procedure has been necessary for over a week. Noone at Rosano-Davis (maintenance crew for the town) is able to tell me when the repairs will be done. The explanation is that the manufacturer, Interon, is only able to produce 10 parts a week...

Along with other residents in the Straits Pond area of Cohasset, I was required to eliminate my healthy septic system. I paid $4500 for the modifications to my home — electrical, plumbing. Furthermore, the betterment assessment made to my property is $14,648 which I must pay for with my tax bill. Add to that, I pay about $500 per year more to the Town of Cohasset for usage.

This whole situation is outrageous. I know that I am not alone in feeling that the Town of Cohasset has installed defective equipment and badly engineered sewer systems and is asking the residents to pay for them.

I would hope that the Sewer Commission is actively working on a remedy for this fiasco.

GREENBUSH QUESTION OF THE WEEK

'Where are the Hingham stations?'

There are two stations in Hingham. Coming from Weymouth, on the right before you get to the South Shore Country Club entrance (approximately 350 feet before the Fort Hill, West, and South street intersections) will be the West Hingham station. The second station is located at the Hingham lumber site on Summer Street and that station will be called Nantasket Junction.

If you have a Greenbush construction question that others may be interested in, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com or call the Greenbush hotline at 781-682-6350..

Water pollution: Something everyone should care about

By Steve Bobo

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

We've recently closed Bassing Beach to swimming. The cause of the high readings of enterococci in the waters of the town are not known directly, but they are probably attributable to the main cause of increased pollution everywhere; increased development, increased population, ignorance of the effect of increased surface water runoff from our developed places such as parking lots and roads.

But whatever the cause, it's changing the way we have to live in our environment. We can't eat clams or mussels from our beaches. Now we can't swim in our harbor, or eat fish from our ponds.

A scientific consensus (mostly EPA data) indicates that after cleanup of major pollution sources, the rest is from so-called 'non-point sources'. These are mainly surface water runoff from, non pervious surfaces such as driveways, roads, parking lots, etc. and improperly processed septic system effluent.

Federal state and town plans are well advanced to address the cleanup of non-point sources, and the dimension of the problem is becoming clear.

For Cohasset, minimum federal and state requirements call for identification and mapping of all catch basins and storm drains, the primary conduits through which surface water enters our ponds, streams, rivers and estuaries. In Cohasset, we have about 900 storm drains. Development of a plan for the town to complete the identification and mapping effort to DEP standards, is estimated to cost about $200,000. The cost of fixing the problem involves modification of those

40B needs overhaul, not minor tweaking

YOUR REP

GARRETT BRADLEY

As the official session of the legislature came to a close this past week, one of the issues of importance that was discussed was the Chapter 40B law. This law has allowed developers to bypass local zoning laws in return for building a certain percentage of affordable housing units. The law has taken away the ability from our local communities to make important decisions about future growth.

Two pieces of legislation dealing with Chapter 40B came up near the end of the legislative session. One was the Omnibus Housing Bill, which contained changes to 40B, and the second was a Housing Bond Bill. The two pieces of legislation went into a Conference Committee to resolve the differences between the House and Senate versions of the bill. As expected, they were released from the Conference Committee with very little time left in our legislative session. This shortens the time that legislators like myself can review and amend the legislation.

After reading the Conference Committee version of the Omnibus Housing Bill, I realized that there were no substantive changes to Chapter 40B. The concerns that had been raised in the House about providing local communities with more control over development were not addressed in the final product. Therefore, I worked with other like-minded representatives to try and convince our colleagues to vote no. This would have sent the bill back to the Conference Committee with a strong message for the committee members to do a better job addressing the concerns of many local communities. We also argued that we should not send the Housing Bond Bill to the Senate until they get serious about changes to Chapter 40B that give back some measure of control to our communities. Since chances are solid that there may not be another bond bill for five years, we felt this was our best opportunity to amend Chapter 40B.

During the debate, I took the floor several times to say that the Omnibus Bill was "window dressing" when it came to Chapter 40B. The bill included no change to the definition of affordable, no inclusionary zoning (which allows the local planning boards to mandate a portion of any project over 10 units must have an affordability component, thereby leveling the playing field with a developing who may be threatening to use 40B), and no changes that allowed a town to take into account density, water availability or financial feasibility. Instead, we were told there was language that authorized a commission to look at these issues. Don't hold your breath. Without a 1-year moratorium on all40B projects in the state, I argued that there was no way to force the commission to address real reform of Chapter 40B.

The Omnibus Housing Bill proved that the conferees paid no real attention tore forming Chapter 40B. Every major section has readily available loopholes. That is why we took a very hard look at these two pieces of legislation. In effect, we decided to draw a line in the sand.

Unfortunately, we were unsuccessful at convincing enough colleagues to send the Omnibus Housing Bill back to the Conference Committee. State Representative Frank Hynes and I will be convening a meeting with the 59 legislators who voted with us to plan a strategy for the next legislative session. It is our hope that this issue will be the first discussed in January. Clearly, we are not against more affordable housing. However, after 33 years Chapter 40B needs to be amended to account for community growth. Some control has to be given back to local communities.

As always, I welcome your input on this or any other issue. You can reach me at the State House at (617) 722-2120.

Days of rancor and confusion

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Aug. 2

Once the rancor and confusion of the final few days of legislative debate died down, it was possible to get some perspective on what had occurred.

Rancor first: In both branches, members no longer make any bones about their displeasure with their leaders. In both cases, the fundamental problem is the same: President Birmingham and Speaker Finneran are seen by members as too anxious to micromanage all affairs.

In the Senate, the discontent is off-camera, but it's clear most senators are eager for a change in the presidency, which will occur because President Birmingham is running for governor. Finneran was openly taken to task by some veteran members July 30 for arm-twisting on a critical housing vote. Their anger forced him to back down from an earlier declaration that no gubernatorial vetoes would be overridden, but most members would prefer collaboration to reciprocal coercion.

Now confusion: it's always confusing at the end of the session, and the main reason is human nature. It's a representative democracy, after all, and that means, like most of their constituents, legislators try to do too much at the last second. At midnight the galleries were jam packed, with a patchwork of lobbyists peering down, hoping to see their special item acted on or someone else's defeated. Both chambers were scenes of stressful chaos. For the vested — the people who get paid to achieve policy objectives or defeat those of others — judging the outcome of this final week was easy. The advocate simply asks: did I get what I wanted? Did my opponents lose? Without exaggeration, it's possible to say there were thousands of different answers for hundreds of different lobbyists and advocates.

For ordinary people, the end of the session can effectively be evaluated with other questions: what activity had the most impact – the most effect on the greatest number of people? And how healthy is the decision-making process for which reps and senators were paid an aggregate $15 million over the 18 months?

On impact, the biggest stories were housing, Medicaid and the Central Artery.

The Legislature tried to encourage the production of more affordable houses and apartments while mollifying the near-panic some communities feel about being forced to accept lots of new affordable development. Lawmakers passed one bill that, if it works as envisioned, will motivate communities with exclusionary building rules to plan for more affordable housing over the next few decades. The Legislature also passed a bill authorizing $508 million to improve and create public housing. And it also authorized the destruction and attempted reinvention of a 100-unit public housing complex in Fall River, which could set a precedent.

House members did not address the cancellation of Medicaid participation by the state's big drugstore chains. The Senate tried to rush a bill through, but produced it too late Wednesday. By Thursday afternoon, Acting Gov. Swift was able to announce the major pharmacies had agreed to a two-month delay in their plans to quit Medicaid. That gives the powers to be time to work out an agreement designed to make sure about 900,000 poor and disabled people still have a place to fill prescriptions. To the angry amazement of many, the House and Senate extended their failure to pass a law governing the 30 acres of land about to open up along Boston's harbor after the Big Dig is done. They had hoped to have a law in place last year. That leaves profound decisions about Boston's development in limbo, still captive to closed-door infighting over power and cost sharing. That may be all citizens need to know about their power in the process: insiders and legislators themselves feel impotent in a 200-person Legislature where nearly everything important is decided by two people. The end of formal sessions means finality on many key issues:

• By the narrowest of margins, the Senate overrode the governor's veto of legislation authorizing the destruction of the Watuppa Heights public housing project in Fall River. Combined with the House's override, by an only slightly wider margin, the 26-13 vote may encourage other such proposals – to the chagrin of many affordable housing advocates.

• The House and Senate restored funding for communities to expand kindergarten programs to the full-day model. A veto that would have had the effect of making state retirees pay more for health insurance was also overridden. Lawmakers also delivered funds to community health centers over Swift's objections.

• Democrats let most of Swift's vetoes stand. Only $71 million of the $355 million vetoed by the governor Monday (July 29) was restored, necessitating widespread program cuts. Among the most visible is the reduction of the budget for the Massachusetts Cultural Council to $7.3 million from $19.1. House Speaker Finneran said Wednesday (July 31) the state has about $300 million left in its budget reserve fund – and budget analysts perceive up to a $1.5 billion structural deficit on next year's books.

• The Legislature passed an alternative to the bilingual education initiative now on its way to the November ballot. The governor asked for an amendment dealing with "full day" bilingual, which lawmakers approved and sent back to her desk.

• Lawmakers passed a transportation bond bill that, in addition to authorizing $220 million in projects across the state, expanded the membership of the turnpike authority by two members, to five. Swift named Nicholas A. Lopardo and John M. Moscardelli to the turnpike board in February, before Christy Mihos and Jordan Levy won their seats back. Will she reappoint now the pair? But the Legislature rejected the recommendations of the high-profile Carter Commission, and did not change the Massport board membership.

• The House and Senate also approved a $707 million environmental bond bill that continues or commences an enormous array of land conservation and local park projects.

• The Legislature sent to the governor a do-not-call bill, requiring telemarketers to abide by the request of people who register not to receive solicitations by phone.

STORY OF THE WEEK Resolution of the long-standing difficulties over Chapter 40B, with the accompanying passage of the eagerly-anticipated housing bond bill.

Elvis lives!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I'd stay away from Memphis, Tenn., this week if I were you because they're having a big howdy-do over the 25th anniversary of the day Elvis is supposed to have died, Aug. 16, 1977.

There'll be folks traipsing all over Graceland, the Presley mansion, at $25 a head ($22.50 for seniors), attending a gospel brunch at $21.95, a concert by Elvis' old band at $50 and a Memphis University seminar, "Is Elvis History?:2002 and Beyond," at $100.

There's even a side trip to Tupelo, Miss., a two-hour drive from Memphis to the two-room shack where Elvis was born, where you can view the store where he bought his first guitar and Johnnie's Drive-In, where he used to chow down on cheeseburgers and Royal Crown cola.

I just had to find out what Elvis thought about it.

The King himself, as we insiders know, has been living quietly for the past 15 years in Kingston, where he has found it easy to disappear in the void between the rich people in Duxbury and the tourists in Plymouth.

"Best place in the world to drop out," he told me once. "Tourists pass through going to Plymouth. Never stop. Folks in Duxbury pay no never mind to Kingston either, 'less the servants talk about it."

Elvis settled in Kingston after those disastrous trips to Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Denton, Texas; Kalamazoo, Mich., where he was spotted in a Burger King; and Vicksburg, Miss., where someone saw him in Felpausch's grocery store.

I knocked on his door, using the secret knock known only to me and the swans on Eel River.

"Welcome, friend," he said in those velvet tones that used to make teen-aged girls swoon. "Here, have a honey dipped doughnut."

"No, thanks."

"Ah once ate a dozen of these in a taxi-cab while on my way to the White House. Say, how is old Dick, anyway."

"He's dead now."

"Ah'm right sorry to hear that. How 'bout a chocolate sundae?"

"No, thanks."

"Ah had five of them for breakfast one day and they were so good that Ah passed right out. How're things at Graceland? I sure do miss the place but I don't miss what happened to me there.

"You don't know what it was like. Never a minute to yourself. The fans, the autographs, the cameras going off in mah face. And the women. They never let me be. They just about wore me out. Ah couldn't take it no more so I ran away."

"Graceland is the place to be this week," I told him. "They're having a big bash to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the day everybody thinks you died. There's going to be concerts, tours, movies, a gospel brunch, a dance party, a fashion show, everything."

"Is Automatic Slims still open. You know, the place on South Second Street where you can get voodoo stew and Screamin' Mimi salad."

"It was the last time I was there."

"Ah'm getting hungry enough to go myself. All Ah been getting is fried clams and lobster. Ah'm dying for some good southern food. Did I ever tell you my Momma used to feed me corn bread dipped in buttermilk? I think I'll go to Memphis for the celebration myself."

"You'll be recognized."

"No, I won't. I'll go disguised as an Elvis impersonator."

storm drains which have been determined to represent the major risk. We now have an ongoing pilot program for upgrading one storm drain. Cost of the project when complete will be in the about $130,000. Assuming that the town will eventually have to upgrade about 50 percent of its 900 catch-basins and storm-drains, the effort to clean up our water resources would be in the neighborhood of $6,000,000. This is not a pressing problem, unless you want to swim in our ponds and estuaries, or fish from our streams or perhaps, wade in a brook.

The town will work this problem over time and with minimum impact on the budget. We have been successful in obtaining Federal and State money for this cleanup. The pilot catch basin upgrade referred to earlier will probably receive a grant to complete. We just received a grant from the state to develop a program to tell us where our pollution is coming from. And over the years, we will carry out our plan and non-point pollution sources will be cleaned up.

This massive attempt to mediate the harmful effects of our present way of life goes on unnoticed and unheralded. Instead, we worry about sidewalks and lighting and fence rails. And we spend lavishly, on bigger houses, better lawns, trash haulers, and on buried electrical cables. We pay for weekly beach sampling to see if the water is still clean around our now million dollar homes.

At minimum, shouldn't we have the same concern and level of interest in those things which are sure to affect us and our offspring; the way we maintain our environment, and the way we treat our living space, and yes, the way we feed our kids.

Scooter-users need some safety training

LOCAL VIEW

OVE PYGH WILCHE

seq CHAPTER \h \r 1Had I hit him, this young boy would have died without even knowing who I am or why he was killed. He just sped out the driveway without looking to either side. The right turn he made was so wide that it took him over the centerline. Then he disappeared down the street at an incredible speed without looking back. It happened so fast that I never applied the brakes. Actually, my only reaction was to watch in horror knowing that only a few feet kept me apart from committing vehicular homicide.

I was on my way home from a friend's house when the incident occurred. It was a summer night of the kind that makes us drive slowly and with the windows down. The neighborhood is quiet, settled with family homes, and the aroma of grilled food and the sound of lawnmowers filled the air. This was the reason why I was caught completely off guard. I heard the engine, but mistook the sound of his motorized scooter for a lawnmower. Just a second later I would realize my mistake and what was a joyful day turned into a terrifying memory.

The fact is that his scooter, in comparison with my car, is a small object and therefore extremely vulnerable in a collision. So much more because it was motorized. At such a high speed it does not take much for the driver to lose his balance. There can be little doubt that it would have caused instant death had we collided. If this had been the case, I would have had to live with the tragedy for the rest of my life, as would the boy's family.

This was the reason why I was caught completely off guard. I heard the engine, but mistook the sound of his motorized scooter for a lawnmower.

It could, of course, be argued that the accident was caused by his negligence. By not stopping and looking to both sides before he pulled out in the street, the boy actually neglected the two most basic rules of traffic. In addition, he did not use any kind of protective gear. Kneepads, elbowpads, and helmets are easily accessible, but the boy wore none of this equipment. All he had was himself dressed in shorts and T-shirt, his motorized scooter and a wish for riding down the street on a beautiful summer night.

On the other side of the fence the argument would be that I am a reckless driver that I did not pay adequate attention, and that I never reacted until it was too late. This would cause the key question in court to be whether I or the boy was at fault. When the court reached a conclusion it would decide accordingly and this would mark the end of the tragedy for the judicial system.

Unfortunately reality is not that simple. The boy's parents, who would be plaintiffs in the case, should instead be called as a third party. I find it remarkable that any parents can give their child a scooter without acquiring the most basic safety equipment. In addition, it is the parents' responsibility to teach their children the rules of traffic and in a case like this not only how to use the safety gear, but to always wear it.

As the story ended all that happened was that I got a "good" scare and the boy a smooth ride down the street. But had the worst-case scenario come true I would have become a killer in a flash of a second. It would not help that I could plead that the accident was caused by the boy's wrongdoing in traffic. It would not help that I could blame the parents for their negligence. I would, as the survivor, have to live with the fact that a too-young life came to an abrupt end and that I was involved.

So, even though the wish to give a child a toy is understandable it is incomprehensible that it can be given without instructions for its use, particularly when it is a vehicle that will make the driver part of the traffic. Therefore, when you choose to give a scooter (motorized or not), a skateboard, a set of roller blades, a bicycle, or any other vehicle make sure your child knows how to use it, the rules of traffic, and how to wear the appropriate safety gear. After all, it is your child's life put at high risk if you do not act as a responsible parent.

Local legislators vote against housing bill

Say it does too little to change '40B'

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Don't look for debate on Beacon Hill over Chapter 40B — the state's affordable housing law — to be over anytime soon.

After months in Conference Committee that irons out differences in proposed legislation between the House and Senate versions, the "so-called" changes to 40B in the Omnibus Housing Bill did little but make local legislators hopping mad.

"It was nothing but window dressing," said State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. In fact, he and State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, helped lead the charge last week to sink the bill in the House and even tried to hold up its companion legislation, the Housing Bond Bill, to send the message they meant business.

Bradley and Hynes, whose towns are facing 40B projects, were among 61 state representatives to vote against the Omnibus Housing Bill they say has too many loopholes to help the towns gain more control over 40B projects.

"The bottom line is the bill does not make any substantive changes that would have a true, meaningful impact on the communities," Hynes said.

Case in point, says Bradley, is the proposed 254-unit AvalonBay apartment complex in Cohasset. Because Cohasset has less than 2,500 housing units in town, under the new amendments to 40B, the town does not have to absorb more than 150 units at any one time. As a result, AvalonBay is going to split its project into two phases and apply for a comprehensive permit for each phase to comply with the change in the law.

"It's so frustrating," Bradley said. "The Conference Committee had this for six months and this is what they came up with."

Another example of what was just "lip service," Bradley points out, is the bill allows accessory dwellings to count as affordable housing if rented by persons whose incomes qualify by state standards, but only those accessory units built after July 2002. That means existing in-house apartments can't qualify.

Also, under the new law communities with a state-approved plan to increase its affordable housing by 0.5 percent a year can reject 40B projects. The state sets a 10 percent goal of affordable housing for all 351 cities and towns, with 27 currently meeting that standard.

Hynes points out at first blush that sounds OK. For Marshfield, which has some 10,000 units of housing, that means the town, after approving 50 units of affordable housing in a year, could reject other 40B applications outright.

But here's the rub. Hynes says the new amendments will encourage local officials to embrace apartments rather than condominiums or independent housing because of the way 40B counts affordable units. Under the law, all the units count in a rental apartment complex but only up to 25 percent count when condos or houses are proposed.

So if the same developer proposed 50 condos, only 13 would "count." "Under that system, we'd never get to the 10 percent," Hynes said.

But Aaron Gornstein, executive director of the Citizens' Housing and Planning Association, dubbed CHAPA, a state-wide advocacy group that promotes affordable housing, said the bill does give local communities more control.

"It tries to strike a balance," he said. "Not everyone is happy with it, but it was the best possible compromise that could be reached."

In addition to accessory dwellings, CHAPA points out the bill allows towns to include subsidized long-term housing for the mentally ill and mentally retarded; and affordable units created under the Community Preservation Act to count toward its affordable housing stock.

During what CHAPA described "vitriolic" debate on the 40B bill, Bradley, Hynes and other suburban legislators also tried to suspend what is coincidentally called "Rule 40" that prohibits changes to bills once they come out of Conference Committee. In other words, under Rule 40, the House or Senate must vote the final version of the bill that comes out of Conference Committee up or down, they can't amend it. The legislators wanted to suspend Rule 40 and send the bill back to Conference Committee.

Also by voting down the $508 million Housing Bond Bill, even though it included money to renovate existing state public housing in their districts — they would have sent a message to the Senate, they were serious about the 40B issue, Bradley said.

"We went down swinging," he said. "We thought we had a chance to make a statement."

On the senate side, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, was one of three senators to lead the debate against approving the housing bill and says the bill is useless.

"It creates false expectations that we did something related to 40B," he said. "When in fact it does nothing to return any local control or to help create affordable housing."

Hedlund said all six Republican senators voted against the bill; they were joined by eight Democrats despite the fact that Senate leadership backed the bill.

"It's rare in the Senate for Democrats to oppose leadership," Hedlund said. "That shows the level of frustration with this bill."

The Omnibus Housing Bill is now on Gov. Jane Swift's desk. She must either sign it or veto it by the end of the week.

Bradley says debate on 40B will be back. Both Hynes and Bradley support amending 40B to include inclusionary zoning that would, for example, allow towns to require developers proposing housing projects of 10 units or more to include some affordable housing or contribute to a fund for that purpose.

"We have a roll call vote of 61," Bradley says about the state representatives who voted against the Omnibus Housing Bill. "We'll be meeting again with local officials this fall with the aim of placing it (40B changes) first on the agenda in January." (Several recent bills filed by legislators, including the Hynes-O'Brien bill that Bradley is also sponsoring that would give more control back to local communities, weren't addressed in this legislative session).

A positive change in the 40B law under the Housing Omnibus Bill is requiring units to remain affordable for 40 years instead of the 15 now required, Bradley said.

"But even then," he said. "They should have to remain affordable in perpetuity."

CHAPA provided a snapshot of the 40B changes in a press release:

- Limiting the size of the development based on the size of the community;
- Requiring a 12-month "cooling-off" period between development proposals;
- Allowing communities to plan and implement their own method for increasing their affordable housing stock by one-half a percent annually
- Creating a study commission to recommend future changes to Chapter 40B.

Avalon to phase apartment project in permit applications, must schedule a hearing within 30 days of the filing. However, McLaughlin said with vacations and the Labor Day holiday, Avalon is willing to be flexible on the hearing date.

"A couple of days here or there is OK," he said. "We want to get off on the right foot."

McLaughlin is well aware of the rising tide of "anti-40B" sentiment in Cohasset and on the rest of the South Shore, but said Avalon works with local communities.

"(Chapter) 40B has become a lightning-rod issue," he said. "We've had a dozen 40B projects and all were successfully negotiated at the local level."

McLaughlin said some builders who may be less experienced with 40B "may have pushed the envelope on the rules" but Avalon's approach is more long term and the company prides itself on local involvement.

The Virginia-based developer is proposing building 23, two-to-three story wood-frame buildings with one, two- and three-bedroom units.

AvalonBay first came to town about 11 months ago and met informally with town officials at that time.

The reason for the holdup has been determining how to handle wastewater from the site. AvalonBay had considered buying sewer capacity from the Hull Treatment Plant, but Avalon said that is now off the table because of the infrastructure needed to pipe the effluent 2-1/2 miles to Hull. Instead, Avalon plans to build an on-site sewer treatment plant.

Market rents for the units will range from about $1,600-$2,000 per month depending on the apartment type. The affordable units will rent from $600-$1,100.

The project is not a "done deal" because the Zoning Board can set conditions as long as they don't hurt the economic viability of the project and the board also has the authority to deny the comprehensive permit. Avalon can appeal a denial to the state although the state expects a fairly rigorous process at the local level.

The Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency has given the AvalonBay project site approval meaning the project meets the criteria for the state housing subsidy program.

The process can be complex . The ZBA attended a course on Chapter 40B; town counsel also provided the board with a refresher on the law earlier this year.

The ZBA plans to conduct hearings in the selectmen's office which has better acoustics than the Town Hall auditorium and the room can accommodate about 30 people.

The Planning Board is concerned with the potential loss of valuable commercial property in Cohasset, which is 93 percent residentially zoned.

Of the total 384 acres zoned for commercial development in town, 171 remain undeveloped. The proposed complex would eat up 38 percent of that.

But McLaughlin of Avalon said the proposal is "clearly the highest, best use of the land" that has been basically unused since Webb-Norfolk Conveyor closed in the early '90s. He noted "no one has stepped up to do anything different."

Scituate resident provides battle plan

Meeting in Scituate to oppose 40B, he rallied the Cohasset foot soldiers gathered in the office of Cohasset Travel in Shaw's Plaza to do the same.

The impetus behind the Cohasset group is 254-unit AvalonBay luxury apartment complex, a 40B project, proposed for 62 acres off Route 3A (across from Atlantic Bagel). The group is concerned the complex, which they say is out of character for the town, will overcrowd the schools and over-tax town services.

Monique Smith of Pond Street volunteered to start circulating a Cohasset petition. She and her husband, Justin, are worried that AvalonBay will open the door to destroying the small-town charm that drew them to Cohasset.

Rich Piasecki, 183 Sohier St., felt so strongly about the fight, he offered to pay the fee to rent the American Legion Hall on Summer Street out of his own pocket if the group needed a larger gathering place. (As it turns out, the next anti-40B meeting is at 7:30 p.m., Aug. 19 at Town Hall).

But before Chin arrived on his white steed to instill a sense of action and hope into the group – the Red Coats, namely Bill McLaughlin and Liz Smith of Avalon, who read about the meeting in the newspaper — fielded questions during the first hour.

While body armor wasn't needed, the Avalon representatives did need a thick skin to handle a barrage of tough questions from the group that doesn't want AvalonBay in the neighborhood.

Concerns included environmental (the proposed on-site wastewater treatment plant); how many children the complex would attract (estimates ranged from 30 to 80); and impact on traffic.

"I own the building across the street and it's (Avalon) is going to wreak havoc on the traffic," said Roger Hill of Highland Avenue.

During, what at times was more of an interrogation than a question-answer session, several charged Avalon's only motive is money.

"Those of us who believe in diversity want to pay for it through a public agency that is not making a profit," said Peter Pratt, a member of the Planning Board.

Piasecki added, "the project is being driven by a company using the guise of affordable housing to come in and make money here."

McLaughlin of AvalonBay, who tried to allay fears, fielded all the questions. At times the atmosphere edged on being confrontational – with both sides asking to be allowed to finish without interruption.

McLaughlin explained Avalon's 40B filing with the Zoning Board of Appeals is imminent. He talked about the numerous projects the company has built in the state and its record of working with the affected communities to iron out problems.

"We can agree to disagree and be polite," McLaughlin said at one point. He explained Avalon has 1,500 housing units under construction in the state today, all of which gained local approval. The Cohasset project will include about 50 affordable units that will rent at one-half the market-rate. He said housing diversity is something the community might benefit from.

"With median home prices at $600,000, this might provide an escape valve for some senior folks, who do not want to pay taxes on the big house," he said. "It's not a bad thing to diversify the housing stock in a community."

The Avalon representatives had already left when Chin of Scituate arrived. While organizer Michael Westcott was formulating a game plan on an easel equipped with plenty of paper, Chin focused the group on taking immediate action.

In addition to calling a Special Town Meeting, he urged the group to get the backing of selectmen and to attend every Zoning Board of Appeals hearing with Avalon.

He explained people need to be convinced it's not just a "NIMBY" issue but one that affects all taxpayers.

"I know it's a tough effort," he said. "But it's important to get people there at the first hearing and every one after.

"You want a crowd there, it's important that everyone recognize this is a town-wide issue," Chin said.

State budget cuts slash health education programs

EDUCATION MATTERS

MIKE GILL

The Fiscal-Year 2003 budget for the State of Massachusetts was completed shortly after midnight on July 31. The House took up only a few of the Governor's vetoes for override votes. Unfortunately, tobacco, cancer, and comprehensive school health education line items were not among them. This means that those cuts to the items the Governor announced on Monday are now the final budget numbers. The FY '03 budget went into effect on Aug. 1.

In the final FY '03 budget, comprehensive school health education, which funds health promotion in the schools, was completely eliminated along with some other programs. Last year, the total spent on this program in Massachusetts was $25.4 million. All of that money came from the tobacco tax, which ironically was increased by 75 cents per pack on July 25. This recent tax increase brings Massachusetts' total state tax on cigarettes to $1.51, the highest state cigarette tax in the nation. This new tobacco tax increase is expected to bring in tens of millions of dollars each year into the State's general fund with not one penny of it going to promote health education in the schools.

What does it mean to Cohasset? Since 1993, each school district in the state has received tobacco tax money in the form of Health Protection grants. Last year, the Cohasset Schools received $28,000. This money was used to fund the employment of two part-time health educators, Judy Wilson who has been an elementary health educator in Cohasset for the past eight years and teaches at the Joseph Osgood School and Jane Gregory who just completed her first year as the health educator at the Deer Hill School. Their entire salaries are paid for by the grant, which is funded by the tobacco tax. Because of the new state budget cuts, both are expected to lose their jobs.

How do the cuts impact Cohasset students? Cohasset elementary school students may no longer receive instruction from certified health educators who have for many years developed and implemented programs in the following areas: tobacco, alcohol, and other substance use/abuse prevention; safety and injury prevention; child abuse prevention; violence and bullying prevention; disease prevention and control; interpersonal relationships; growth and development and puberty education; nutrition; and a variety of skills for risk reduction and positive behavior change (communication skills, decision making skills, assertiveness skills, and refusal skills, etc.).

Cutting a program that we have spent over 20 years building is very disheartening; losing two dedicated teachers who are so committed to working with Cohasset's youth is downright depressing and sad. These two teachers contribute so much to their respective faculties as well as to the school culture that the entire community will feel their absence. We will exhaust all avenues to find the $32,000 to fund those positions, though, as of now, I'm not sure where to turn.

Dr. Michael Gill is the Cohasset school district's health education coordinator.

Dynasty revived

DAVID INGBER

What makes something a dynasty in athletics? The Pittsburgh Steelers winning four Super Bowls in six years? The Boston Celtics pinning down the National Basketball Association title 11 times in 13 seasons? Lance Armstrong dominating the Tour de France bike race for nearly half a decade?

Sure, those qualify, as did another one right here on the South Shore just a few years back. The Cohasset Swim Center Team won the South Shore League Swim League championships for eight straight summers, 1992 through 1999.

Back then, winning the whole thing was a given for the Cohasset swimmers, ranging in age from the callow six year old fledglings to the firmly established 17-year old veterans. Cohasset would win every dual meet by a minimum of 250 points, then perfunctorily crush the rest of the league at the August Championship meet. The only drama year after year revolved around the chase for second place honors.

However, all this changed a few years ago. As it happens with every dynasty, the power in the league began to shift.

The Marshfield Area Swim Klub (MASK), a year round club notorious for signing on ringers from prestigious swim teams throughout southeastern Mass., joined the league. These unknown All-Stars were not full members of the team; they only participated in meets with high hopes of knocking the Mighty Cohasset team down a peg.

And the neighboring Scituate team, the Knights of Columbus, began to grow in popularity. Heavy recruiting, especially in the younger age groups, led to a sizeable team that rivaled even Cohasset's army of over 150 swimmers. Bear in mind, the K of C used to be a joke meet. It wasn't all that long ago this team could not even scrape together enough participants to fill every event, while Cohasset needed two or three heats of each to keep all swimmers happy.

All of a sudden, Cohasset had not one, but two worthy opponents. MASK even had the gall to steal the coveted silver championship trophy away from Team Townie in 2000. Last year, the Knights of Columbus pulled out a titanic upset of

Momentum wave builds for swimmers

Cohasset Swim team surges in to league meet off of unbeaten season

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

There was much to celebrate on Friday evening when Cohasset Swim Team met for their annual awards ceremony. In the previous weeks, the team had survived challenges from a strong MASK squad and Scituate's powerful Knights of Columbus. And, on Friday, they capped things off in fitting fashion by beating Hanover YMCA to end the year undefeated.

So the Cohasset swimmers head in to the South Shore Swim League Championships on Friday in Duxbury with good spirits and excellent prospects.

Cohasset got off to its usual strong start on Friday with a win in the one hundred yard medley relay for the eight and under boys and a second, third and fifth place finish for the girls (1st: Salerno; Faber; Mahoney; Durkin, J.; 2nd: Culhane; Carpenter; MacCormack; Fontaine; 3rd: McCarthy; Berube; Murphy; Kissick; girls: 2nd: Farren, A.; Donohue; Berube; Haber; 3rd: McCunney; Gibbons; Caron; Teague; 5th: Buckley; Farren, V.; Carrier; Axelson). The ten and under boys matched their younger team mates with first, third and fourth place finishes and the girls were right there with them with first second and third place finishes (boys:1st: Carrier; Porter; Doonan; Kissick; 3rd: Ofsthun; Durkin, J.; Shipp; Buckley; 4th: Queenan; Leahy; Durkin, T.; Murphy; girls: 1st: Mahoney; Kelly, M.; Lehr; Michalowski; 2nd: Kucinski; Teague; Musto; Sullivan; 3rd: Libby; Sullivan; Karski; Culhane). The twelve and under boys kept up the pace to win their event and the girls just missed the win, but took second, third and fourth places (boys: 1st: Doonan; Musto; Cunningham; Hunt; 2nd: Hurley; Kelly; Shipp; Muir; 3rd: Connors;

Post 118 Legion squad hopes for strong returning numbers in 2003

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

In years past, high school graduation generally also signaled the end of American Legion baseball careers. It appears that may no longer be the case, and Cohasset Post 118 may be the big beneficiaries of that.

The Legion squad saw nine of its players adorned in caps and gowns earlier this summer, but a healthy number of those could be back next year.

Several will become eligible to do so when, as expected, the governing body for American Legion Baseball approves increasing the age cutoff date by six months. The change would allow players who haven't reached their 20th birthday by Jan 1, 2003 to maintain playing eligibility. So far as Post 118 coach Scott Arnold knows, that covers all nine of the recent high school graduates from Scituate and Cohasset,

"We could be one of the big

Cohasset's McKenney and Sheerin named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed here as "Honorable Mentions" received serous consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

After consulting with area coaches, however, we feel secure that we chose the top 14 singles players and top four doubles teams in Marinerland for this honor.

Kristin Sheerin – Senior (Capt.)
Second Home — Cohasset

Kristin Sheerin

Kristin graduates as Cohasset High's all-time leading scorer by far with 153 points... closed out her four year starter's career with 47 goals and 21 assists this season, finishing second (to Maura McKenney) in the team scoring race after winning it the previous three years...missed a few games mid-season to represent Massachusetts at the National Gymnastic Championships in Las Vegas...though undersized for a lacrosse player, Kristin compensated with exceptional speed, quickness, balance and instincts – assets which likewise served her well as a gymnast...will long be remembered for her electrifying solo charges on net...three-time Pilgrim Conference all-star...two time Mariner All-Scholastic...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...six time Pilgrim Conference all-star in gymnastics who shattered every Cohasset High gymnastics record during her six year varsity career...will continue her gymnastics career at SUNY-Brockport, where she will major in Communications...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Kristin has been a consistent force her entire career even when opposing defenses a lot of the time were designed specifically to shut her down. She's just an amazing athlete who'll be extremely tough to replace."

Maura McKenney — Junior Center — Cohasset

Maura McKenney

The 2002 team most valuable player became the first player other than Kristin Sheerin to lead the Lady Skippers in scoring since 1998 with 54 goals and 22 assists...her emergence as an explosive offensive presence helped free up Sheerin from constant pressure this season, making the Lady Skippers a much stronger team, as they reached the second round of the state tourney for the first time ever...scored four goals against state powerhouse Westwood in playoffs...Pilgrim Conference all-star...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic Honorable Mention...plays lacrosse year-round...playing this summer for the Bay State Select team which competes nationally...a three year varsity regular who has already been named captain for next season...has also been a member of the C.H.S. varsity soccer and ski teams since her freshman year...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Maura really came on as an unbelievably strong scorer this season. You can tell how hard she worked on her game, and she seemed to take it to another level against better competition. She's a phenomenal defensive player too."

Kristin Sheerin (dark shirt) graduated with 153 career points for Cohasset High and was a no-brainer for our All-Scholastic honors the last two years.

Caitlin Fitzgerald - Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Hingham

Caitlin Fitzgerald

A talented middie, Fitzgerald handled the majority of draws for Hingham and did so with much success...A strong offensive and defensive player for the 10-time Pilgrim League champion Harborwomen (19-2-1), Fitzgerald combined blistering speed and quick moves to cut through opponents' defenses...Her slick stick skills were also a key to Hingham's near-perfect passing game...Her performance at the center position for the past two seasons helped the Harborwomen's offense get to work, often winning the draw against her opponent...Her work helped Hingham capture a state title last year, and South Sectional finals appearance this season...Fitzgerald plans to attend college and may continue her lacrosse career.

Bridget Driscoll - Senior (Capt.)
Defense - Hingham

Bridget Driscoll

No question here... A two-time All-American defender, Driscoll was the key fixture in Hingham's nearly impenetrable defense... A three-time Pilgrim League All-star, Driscoll received coveted "Player of the Year" honors from the Boston Globe this season...Her intensity and smarts in the backfield consistently weakened Hingham's opponents and continually shut down an opponent's top scorer...Also added 20 goals and 33 assists over her four-year lacrosse career...Driscoll's performance over the last two seasons has helped Hingham produce a state title (2001) and appearance in the South Sectional finals (2002)...She also was a key component to Hingham (19-2-1) winning its 10th consecutive Pilgrim League title this season at 12-0...Driscoll was a three-sport captain at HHS this season, also playing soccer in the fall and basketball in the winter...The multiple Patriot and Pilgrim League All-star and valedictorian is a four-time Mariner All-Scholastic twice making our hoop and lacrosse squads...Driscoll will attend Harvard University in the fall and plans to continue playing lacrosse.

Meaghan Marshall - Senior (Capt.) Attack - Hingham

Meaghan Marshall

Was the Harborwomen's leading scorer for the past two seasons...This year, she lead Hingham with 102 points on 62 goals and 48 assists...Career totals find the skilled attacker with 347 points (221 goals, 126 assists)...Marshall has been one of the most feared attackers in the state for the past two seasons and last year, led the Harborwomen (19-2-1) to a state title...This year, she helped Hingham advance to the South Sectional finals, where old foe Needham avenged last season's loss, and led the team to its 10th-straight Pilgrim League title (12-0)...Speed, aggressiveness, and quick thinking are among Marshall's greatest attributes...A three-time Pilgrim League All-star and two-time honorable mention to the All-American team, Marshall combined with sophomore transfer Kate Sheridan for one of the state's most impressive attack...A smart player, Marshall gave up the ball as much as she shot it...A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Marshall will attend the University of New Hampshire on a full lacrosse scholarship.

Kate Sheridan - Sophomore Attack - Hingham

Kate Sheridan

Welcome to Hingham High...This talented sophomore transfer was a sensation for Hingham (19-2-1, 12-0 PL) this season, ably filling the offensive voids left by 2001 grads Carrie Williams and Ali Aucoin...Sheridan was the Harborwomen's second-leading scorer, racking up a slew of points this season with her stylistic approach to the net...Her trademark moves (which included behind-the-back shots) in front of the net made her one of the most feared attackers in the area this season...Speed, skills, and strength were keys to her performance this season, which helped land Hingham in the South Sectional finals, where she gave an incredible nine goal effort despite falling to Needham...She also helped the Harborwomen keep their winning tradition alive by recording the team's 10th-straight Pilgrim Conference title...A PL All-star in her first year with Hingham, Sheridan teamed with veteran attack and fellow All-Scholastic Meaghan Marshall to provide one of the better offenses in the state.

Lauren Murphy - Junior Defense - Hingham

This gritty defensive player caused fits for many of Hingham's opponents this season... Overshad-owed a bit by two-time All-American defensewoman Bridget Driscoll, Murphy's talents in the backfield were just as crucial for the South Sectional finalists...Clever stick skills and speed were among Murphy's best attributes on the field and her consistency in each helped the Harborwomen land their 10th consecutive Pilgrim League title at 12-0...Their Sectional final appearance was the second-straight for the Harborwomen, who fell in a one-goal decision to nemesis Needham...Murphy is a two-year varsity player, whose defensive contributions helped Hingham land a state title last season...A three-sport athlete at Hingham High, Murphy also plays soccer in the fall and basketball in the winter...Murphy will return to all three rosters next season.

Ashley Baxter/Hilary Lynch - Goalies - Hingham

Hilary Lynch

This talented goalie duo made scoring difficult for their opponents yet again this season... For the past two years, Baxter, a senior, and Lynch, a junior, have split time between the pipes during each of Hingham's games...Coach Heather Williams let the duo decide for themselves who would play and for how long, each coming and going as they choose...A Pilgrim League All-star, Baxter started in goal for many of the Harborwomen's games this season, while Lynch would come in midway through each half...This uncharacteristic style caused fits for opponents, who were never able to get used to a single keeper...Both equally talented, Baxter and Lynch's quick reflexes and ability to read offenses helped Hingham get to the South Sectional finals for the second-straight season, where nemesis Needham avenged last year's loss in a one-goal decision...The duo combined for a stellar performance in Hingham's 2001 state championship win over Winchester...Baxter plans to attend college and may continue her lacrosse career...Lynch will return to three HHS rosters next season, as the starting goalie on the soccer team, leading forward on the basketball team, and will take sole control of goal on the lax squad.

Elizabeth Ghilardi — Senior (Capt.) Attack — Norwell

Elizabeth Ghilardi

One of the most explosive offensive players in Eastern Massachusetts, Elizabeth tallied an incredible 117 points (65 goals, 52 assists) this season after notching 108 (58 goals, 50 assists) last season...directed the Lady Clippers to post-season berths in their first two years of varsity competition (2001 and '02)...came up huge in this year's playoffs, as she had a hand in 15 of the Clippers' 21 goals on their surprising march to the state semifinals, her personal highlight a last second goal to lift Norwell past King Phillip in the first round...also paced the team in scoring her freshman and sophomore years, with Norwell playing a shortened JV schedule, to bring her career point total to 382...two-time Mariner All-Scholastic selection...scored eight goals in one game this year (vs. Falmouth and seven in another (vs. Scituate, along with two assists)...two time Pilgrim Conference all-star...sensational stick skills and natural hand-eye coordination are two of the assets which helped set her apart...these skills also served her well on the field hockey field, where she emerged as a top scorer for Norwell this season in her debut season in the sport...played fall soccer in her freshman through junior year...also a regular with the N.H.S. basketball team this winter...National Honors Society member...President and co-founder of N.H.S.'s chapter of S.A.D.D...has been recruited to play lacrosse at Colby College...leaning toward majoring in Special Education...Norwell coach Jen Kent: "We have a balanced team that really came together and peaked at the right time, but when the game was on the line, Liz was the one everyone was looking to, and it was amazing how often she came through. She's just an exceptional talent and a lot of that has been developed through hard work. She's the first one on the practice field and the last one off."

Maura McKenney (#11) formed a dominating one-two scoring punch with Kristin Sheerin this season, which played a big part in taking the Lady Skippers to another level.

Meaghan Dwyer — Senior (Capt.) Goalie – Norwell

Meaghan Dwyer

This two-time Pilgrim Conference all-star and Marienr All-Scholastic made up for her relative lack of size with sensational reflexes and instincts... stopped over 65 percent of the shots she saw this year, with 60 percent being considered an excellent mark in lacrosse...backstopped the Lady Clippers to state tourney berths in 2001 and '02, the first two years of varsity competition for the program, and a surprising run to the state semifinals this spring...has played lacrosse year round the last few years, playing indoors in the winter and fall...currently playing in the Mass Elite summer league... also played high school soccer all four years for Norwell High...National Honors Society member...recruited to play lacrosse at Williams College...undecided on a Major... Norwell coach Jen Kent: "Meaghan was the difference for us in so many game this year. So many coaches came up to me after games to rave about how good she was. To have her in goal the first two years of a varsity program was huge. She is going to be extremely difficult to replace."

Nicole Evans — Senior (Capt.) Midfield — Scituate

Nicole Evans

This extremely well rounded player finished her brilliant high school career with a Scituate High single season best 100 points (59 goals, 41 assists), to bring her school career best total to 207 points (121 goals, 86 assists), helping the Lady Sailors to their first state tourney berth in two years of varsity play...had 72 points her junior year (34 goals, 28 assists)...two-time Pilgrim Conference All-Star...two time Mariner All-Scholastic...Honor Roll student...played basketball at S.H.S. her freshman and sophomore years, and ran indoor track her junior year...plays lacrosse year round...played with the Mass. Elite team the last few years...is headed to the University of New Hampshire on a partial lacrosse scholarship...will major in Business Administration... Scituate coach Paula Evans: "Nicole's biggest asset was probably her versatility and the way she transitioned so quickly between offense and defense. She's a smart player and totally team oriented. If I have any complaint about her game it's that she's a little too unselfish at times. I'd like to see her shoot a little more."

Lauren Glancy — Junior Attack — Scituate

Lauren Glancy

This phenomenal sharp shooter set a school record this season with 73 goals, helping the Lady Sailors to their first state tourney berth in two years of varsity play...also added 14 assists to finish second in the team scoring race (to Nicole Evans) with 87 points...has made the Bay State Games South lacrosse team each of the past three years, and played a key role in this year's gold medal effort with six goals and five assists...also a standout for Scituate High's soccer and ski teams, and has already been named a captain in those sports for next year... Honor Roll Student...teaches tennis...hopes to play college lacrosse...thinking of majoring in Sports Medicine...Scituate coach Paula Evans: "Lauren worked hard to develop in to a more complete player this year. She's a force on the attack, and she held her own on defense too. She really concentrated on that part of her game."

Minnie Doherty – Junior
Midfield — Norwell

Minnie Doherty

This well-rounded athlete has devoted more and more attention to lacrosse the last few years, and has quickly developed in to one of the most versatile players in the area... Pilgrim Confer-ence all-star... moved back and forth between defense and midfield this season, depending on match-ups...finished among the team's assist leaders despite having primarily defensive responsibilities...also a standout in soccer (midfielder) and basketball (returning starting point guard) for Norwell High...also plays ice hockey in Commonwealth Hockey League...National Honors Society.... would like to play lacrosse or soccer in college...is leaning toward majoring in Special Education...Norwell coach Jen Kent: "Minnie is a very good athlete who proved to be extremely versatile this year. No matter where we put her, she did a nice job. She was a huge part of our transition game."

Caitlin McCormick – Senior Defense — Scituate

Caitlin McCormick

Emerged as a key figure on the backline this season, helping Scituate to a state tourney berth in just the second year as a varsity program...amazingly, never picked up a lacrosse stick until her sophomore year of high school, and coach Paula Evans called her one of the most improved players she's ever seen... Pilgrim Conference all-star... despite playing a primarily defensive role, still scored nine goals and added 14 assists this season, which was a testament to her much improved transitioning skills...speed and endurance were her main assets, along with much better stick skills...key figure in directing Lady Sailors to first tourney berth in two year history of varsity program...attended Notre Dame Academy in Hingham her freshman year...also ran fall cross country and winter indoor track the last three years at Scituate High, captaining both teams in her senior year...specialized in the 600- and 1,000-meter races indoors...also quite active in high school drama...an Honors student...will attend Fordham University and major in communications...Fordham has no lacrosse program, but she plans to play club lacrosse...Scituate coach Paula Evans: "Caitlin got her confidence this year and everything just clicked after that. She's not as natural as a few of the girls, but she got to the point she's at with hard work and determination."

winners with this rule change," noted Arnold, who was the driving force in getting the Cohasset Legion team off the ground eight years ago. "We've got a lot of kids saying they want to come back. Of course, we'll have to see how kids feel eight or nine months from now, or how some college coaches feel at that time."

Spoken like a true veteran coach. Arnold has never heard again from more than a few players who promised a return the following year. He knows that much changes once a young man gets away from his home town friends and routine and gets caught up in his college or work life. That's the nature of the beast. Arnold understands that.

However, he also feels several of these kids have an attachment to this team that will transcend many of those soon to be formed distractions and impediments.

"I think these kids had a lot of fun playing baseball this summer, and I think that's going to make them want to come back," asserted Arnold. "We had a great group of kids this year, and they all got along. They just went out and played baseball. It was a pretty stress-free environment."

Of course, one of the nine, it seems all but certain, will not be back. Star pitcher Jesse Cole has earned a full scholarship to play Div. 1 ball at Wofford College in South Carolina. His coach will likely urge him to play in a higher caliber league next summer.

Three of the remaining eight would likely also yield to the feelings of their college coaches on this matter. Jason Connelly has been recruited to play ball at Western New England. Ditto for Tom Fitzgerald at Babson. Slugger Tim Straughn has also talked to the UMass-Amhert coach, and there seems a reasonable shot he'll make that team.

Two other Post 118 veterans, Brian Woods and Greg Levin — headed to Curry and Bowdoin as freshman, respectively – may try to walk-on with their college teams, but coaches of smaller programs like these likely would not have a problem with them returning to Legion ball.

Cole, Connelly and Fitzgerald were the top pitchers for this year's team that made it to the second round of the state tourney for the first time since the program was re-born eight years ago. Straughn was also a regular on the mound, so much would seem to be riding on the return of these players.

"We're not going to be fooling anyone," conceded Arnold. "Pitching is going to be an area we'll probably need quite a bit of work in next year."

"I think these kids had a lot of fun playing baseball this summer, and I think that's going to make them want to come back."

-Cohasset Post 118 Legion Coach Scott Arnold

The likeliest of the regulars in this year's pitching rotation to return would seem to be Chris Carr, a 2002 B.C. High grad who is off to Duke University, but not to play baseball. Carr pitched extremely well down the stretch this summer, winning two games during the team's 7-1 regular season finish.

Other pitching candidates for next year's team could be Alex Knight (Scituate High grad who is off to prep school to play soccer), Eric Demahowski (a senior-to-be at B.C. High), Mike Snowdale (Cohasset's High's number two hurler behind Straughn this spring), Ted Straughn (Tim's little brother who pitched some for Cohasset High as a freshman this spring) and Joe Duggan (a Scituate High standout who signed up too late for Legion ball this summer).

One key '02 grad, starting third baseman Mike Gulinello (Scituate High), has already given coach Arnold a promise he'll be back not only this year, but likely the one after that – something the coach considers a huge boon for the future.

"Mike Gulinello was definitely our unsung hero this year," lauded Arnold. "He was one of our top, if not our top hitter, and he led us in stolen bases, and played a great third base. He's a great anchor for this team."

Demahowski , Snowdale and Ted Straughn headline the list of Post 118 players who return to high school, but Arnold sees some quality depth also being provided by the likes of Brian Signorelli (senior-to-be at Thayer), John Andrade (sophomore-to-be at Cohasset High) and Terence O'Brien (soph-to-be at Scituate High).

Appraised the veteran coach: "O'Brien is an excellent catcher, Demahowski, Ted Straughn and Andrade should have a home in our outfield, Snowdale's a good solid infielder and Signorelli can play a lot of positions and he's a good, good hitter."

"All those younger players stepped into roles and I can see them expanding on that next year," he added. "They're all good players."

The bottom line, however, regardless of who he winds up with on his roster, Arnold makes it clear that he wants to continue having fun.

"We want to win, but we want to have fun too," said Arnold. "The kids have a lot of things to do in the summer. We want them to want to come out and just play baseball."

And that applies not only on a game-to-game basis, but year-to-year.

Marshfield and Cohasset in capturing their first ever South Shore League trophy, relegating the CSC to an unheard-of third place finish.

But that was then and this is now. Cohasset now looks primed to win back the hardware that rested so peacefully at the Sohier Road location for so many years.

Cohasset began the summer of 2002 with a series of tune-up meets, where team coaches had the luxury to create virtually any line-up they wanted, knowing that CSC would still romp.

With the team's record standing at 4-0, Cohasset swimmers finally had the chance to show what they were made of, facing off against the MASK team it had beaten by a mere seven points in the 2001 dual meet competition. But CSC grabbed a big lead in the opening eight events and never looked back, dancing to a triple digit margin victory, 366-255.

The next week, only the Knights of Columbus stood in the way of Cohasset's undefeated summer. And while Scituate led the meet after the medley relays, the individual medleys, the freestyle, butterfly and backstroke, Cohasset ended up cruising to a 50 point victory with stellar performances in the backstroke and freestyle relays.

This Friday, the annual All-League meet will be held at the Duxbury Yacht Club, with all eight teams in the league sending their best to compete for the silver trophy. A win on Friday would not only be the perfect end to an already incredible comeback summer, but it would restore South Shore swimming honor to a town that has earned it.

In the butterfly the eight and under boys produced their usual strong performance to finish first, second and third (1st: Mahoney, R.; 2nd: Fontaine, A.; 3rd: MacCormack, P.). There was more success for the fourteen and unders, with both the boys and girls taking a win (boys: 1st: Conway, C.; 2nd: Dickinson, R.; girls: 1st: Daley, M.; 4th: Musto, L.; 6th Tehranian, R.), and the event finished with a first, second and third for the seventeen and under boys and second, third and sixth for the girls (boys: 1st: Tehranian, K.; 2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Faber, S.; girls: 2nd: Regan, D.; 3rd: Jerome, E.; 6th: Harrington, B.).

In the remaining seventeen and under, two hundred yard race, the pattern prevailed and Cohasset finished the afternoon with wins for both the boys and girls (boys: 1st: Blackburn; Tehranian; Ingber; Lehr; 2nd: Hurley, P.; Dickinson; Faber; Roach; girls: 1st: Anderson; Daley; Jerome; Durkin; 4th: Faber; Harrington; Richardson; Lehr; 6th: Hurley, C.; James; Musto; Guinee). The meet ended with a resounding victory for Cohasset, three hundred and eighty six points to Hanover's two hundred and eleven.

What a successful season this has been. It has been a pleasure to watch the focus and power of this squad and to see the strength of their team spirit. Of course much of the credit must go to Alison Hughes Ryan, who has coached the team through seven successful seasons, several of which finished with the team undefeated. Sadly, Alison will not be back next year and she will be very much missed. The good news is she is looking forward to the birth of her first child, and we congratulate her and wish her well on this new and exciting project!

Congratulations to all the Cohasset swimmers. There were so many memorable moments in this short season - Jay Salerno finishing his race and having time to get out of the pool before the second place swimmer had even reached home; the older boys and girls teaching the younger swimmers about team spirit with a rousing pre-meet cheer; the sea breeze and beautiful surroundings of Eel River Beach Club; Alexander Hunt's intensity of focus in a false-start backstroke event where even Ted's leap into the pool couldn't stop him, and his ability to come back and win the event when the race was re-started; one swimmer's final, almost slow motion, strenuous reach to end the breaststroke in first rather than second place and, in the same meet against K of C, the effort, on the last lap of the last free relay to bring the team from behind to secure a final win. And, of course, the routine heroics of the kids who turn up every day for practice and the parents who devote so much of their summer to supporting the team effort.

Well done to everybody, and good luck to the All Stars in Friday's Championship.

POLICE BRIEFS

Arrest follows seating dispute

Police charged a 40-year-old Cohasset man with assault and battery following an apparent dispute over seating at the Music Circus last Thursday night.

Chief Robert Jackson said Sean T. Curry, 580 Jerusalem Road, assaulted the venue's general manger Vince Longo in his office, knocking his glasses off and breaking them. Earlier Curry had caused a disturbance in the tent and apparently got upset and then went to see the general manager, Jackson said.

The detail officers on duty arrested Curry. Alcohol was a factor but Jackson said police believe Curry, who was also taken under protective custody, did not consume the alcohol on the Music Circus premises.

Curry was arraigned on the charges of assault and battery, disorderly person and wanton destruction of property over $250 in Quincy District Court. He is scheduled to return to court Sept. 17 for a pretrial hearing, Jackson said.

Stranger at the beach

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he has received complaints from parents at Sandy Beach about a strange man who is approaching children there. Haddad said, although the reports are unconfirmed, he wanted to get the word out to parents to keep an extra eye on their kids. Police Sgt. John Conte said police had not heard the complaints but would look into the matter.

Classical for kids

Dixie Whatley hosts summer concert series for children

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When Joan Bennett Kennedy canceled plans to appear with the Boston Landmarks Orchestra for free concerts for children this summer, television favorite Dixie Whatley was happy to step in.

Last month, Whatley narrated Sergei Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf" at two concerts on Boston Common. Whatley will reprise her role as narrator of the beloved classic at two more concerts on Aug. 16 at the Ruth Gordon Amphitheater in Quincy.

"I have long advocated that children be introduced to classical music at an early age," explained Whatley by telephone from her Wellesley home recently. "These free concerts are a wonderful way to do just that, because it is not on every family's agenda to pay to see a classical orchestra."

Whatley has previously read "Yes, Virginia, There is a Santa Claus" with the Boston Pops. More recently, she presented the Italian fairy tale "Old Belfana" with the Wellesley Orchestra. Whatley had some important help preparing for this summer's assignment."

When Joan Kennedy realized that she wouldn't be able to do these concerts, she made a copy of the music — complete with her notes — and sent it to me. Joan knew that I had never done 'Peter and the Wolf' and she was very gracious about helping me."

Standing in for the former wife of Senator Edward M. Kennedy isn't Whatley's first experience as a replacement. In 1981, she gained national recognition when she replaced former Miss World Marjorie Wallace as co-host of "Entertainment Tonight," just a month after the television series debuted in syndication. Before long, however, Whatley would also know what it was like to be replaced. In 1982, Mary Hart took over as host of "Entertainment Tonight" and Whatley was moved to weekends as co-host of "Entertainment This Week." In 1984, Leeza Gibbons took Whatley's weekend slot. After a period as a correspondent, Whatley left "ET" altogether in 1986. Not too much later, Whatley began a 14-year stint covering the arts in greater Boston as Entertainment Editor for WCVB-TV's Newscenter 5 broadcasts. From 1988-90, Whatley also appeared opposite Rex Reed on the nationally syndicated "At the Movies."

Just last year, budget cuts eliminated her WCVB-TV position. Since then, Whatley has been host of "Boston Works Career TV" which airs Sunday mornings on WB-56.

"I'm not sure what I want to do next," Whatley candidly admits. "I've really had to ask myself whether I want to continue to talk about what other people do, or just do it myself."

In addition to her long television career, Whatley has also been an illustrator for

Austin Powers in Goldmember (B+)

If the UN has a rule about the fair allocation of fart jokes and ribald sophomoric humor featuring urination, defecation, exacerbation, sexual excitation and other things ending with -nation, then this latest "Austin Powers" flick has grabbed more than its share. This may dis-empower lesser movies that'll try to disgorge these childish things but usually just make one want to grow up — think Martin Lawrence if you're having trouble focusing — but fret not about that. This franchise's zenith, in its third outing, masterfully takes us to the edge of nausea, pulls back, leaving us with belly laughs. Granny may not like it but she hasn't liked a movie since Crosby and Hope did their road movies. Consider this "Road to World Domination II"; the second film was more or less the same shtick: evil lusting to do evil. It's raw but it's ripe, too.

Mike Myers, who honed his craft on "Saturday Night Live" and blossomed since then, adores Austin, a character cribbed from Michael Caine's famous spy guy from decades ago wedded to a goofy take on James Bond, decked out in clothing that by comparison make 1960s Carnaby Street outfits seem like Bond Street. The way Austin opens his rotted-teeth-infested mouth into a lascivious grin, narrows his eyes to slits of craving, and emits something ending with "yeah, bay-beeeeee!" is, as the Brits say, brilliant, a bit he repeats with the zeal of a religious mantra. In its sartorial and elocutionary awfulness Austin is Myers' masterpiece.

Healing through music

Judy Collins will perform in the "Wildflower Festival" coming to the South Shore Music Circus Aug. 16.

Judy Collins' 'Wildflower Festival' pays tribute to Sept. 11

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

It was only after meeting a member of the New York City Fire Department this spring that Judy Collins figured out how todeal with some of the emotion she felt following the September 11 tragedies.

"The whole emotional journey has been just overwhelming," explained the singer/songwriter by telephone from New York last week.

"In April, I performed at a fundraiser for the firefighters. After the performance, I was introduced to a fire captain who showed me that he had "343" tattooed on his neck, for the number of firefighters who lost their lives. It was quite moving to be in the presence of this man and others like him who were there that night. My husband (sculptor Louis Nelson) was with me and he suggested I write about the experience."

Before long, Collins began work on "Kingdom Come," a new song which she will perform when she brings her second annual "Wildflower Festival" tour to the South Shore Music Circus on Aug. 16.

"'Kingdom Come' tells the story of the firefighters. When I do it in concert, I dedicate it to them," she says.

"'Kingdom Come' tells the story of the firefighters. When I do it in concert, I dedicate it to them."

Collins, who has called New York home for many years, had flown to Los Angeles on Sept. 10 for an appearance on ABC-TV's "Politically Incorrect." Writer and political analyst Barbara Olsen was scheduled to be on the same program, but she died on one of the planes that crashed on September 11.

"The world has changed, because of everything that happened on that day," says Collins. "The terrible events of September 11 will have reverberations which we will feel always."

Believing that music can provide healing, Collins is giving more concerts than ever these days. Joining the singer for the Cohasset stop on this summer's Wildflower tour are fellow folk legend Arlo Guthrie ("Alice's Restaurant"), and local performer Greg Greenway.

"The world has changed, because of everything that happened on that day. The terrible events of September 11 will have reverberations which we will feel always."

"I've known Arlo since he was a little boy," laughs the 63-year-old Collins. "He is not only a great performer, but he is also just a real pleasure to work with."

As she did last year, Collins is again producing the Wildflower tour. In addition to her own set, Collins plans to take a more active overall role this time out.

"I will be introducing each act personally, which I didn't do last year. People like to hear a little bit about each of the artists before they come out on stage. The Wildflower Festival is very much my presentation, and my participation will reflect that. Producing is something I've done for years now. I'm very comfortable with it."

Long before she had her own label (Wildflower Records), Collins was recording hit albums and singles for 35 years with Elektra Records. Songs like "Both Sides Now" and "Send In The Clowns" have long been featured in her concerts.

"People like to hear music they know when the come out for a show. They also like to hear music that touches on themes that they can relate to in their own lives. I love the Wildflower format, too, because different singers are with me on different dates. That means that every show is different, fresh and fun."

Greek Salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

There is no definitive recipe for Greek salad but, as a general rule, it contains lettuce, cucumber, pepper, something from the onion family, tomatoes, Kalamata olives and feta. The dressing is a simple combination of oil and vinegar. At its best, Greek salad is at once crunchy, colorful and boldly flavored. At its worst, it's a worn-out hodgepodge of badly matched ingredients.

For the lettuce, the backbone of this salad, I tested romaine, Boston, Bibb, red leaf, and even iceberg. It was no surprise that I found romaine works well but I was taken aback that I also liked the iceberg. Its sturdiness is a plus in this chunky, crunchy salad bowl offering. I tried using smaller portions of spicier greens such as watercress, arugula, or escarole but they were like a skunk at a lawn party – definitely unwelcome. For a salad to serve four to six people, I used ten cups of greens or two medium heads of romaine or one large head of iceberg. Whether using romaine or iceberg it should be sliced into one inch pieces (the iceberg should also be separated a bit since the leaves are so compact) and washed and dried.

Next I started adding cucumber, pepper, something onion, and tomato. I found one half of a large cucumber was ample for the salad. If the skin is bitter it should be peeled. (I don't think it needs to be seeded, however.) I quartered the cucumber lengthwise and cut it into 1/4-inch slices. When adding bell pepper I also think it needs to be cut into thin slices. I used 1/2 of a medium bell pepper that I cut into thirds lengthwise and then into about 1/8 inch slices. I preferred red for both the sweetness and color.

I tried red onion, shallots and scallions and my favorite was the scallion. It was more flavorful than the shallot and less sharp than the red onion. For this recipe I used three scallions trimmed and cut into 1/4-inch slices. Ripe tomatoes add a bright note to the salad — I preferred two medium or a cup of cherry or grape tomatoes. If using large tomatoes, they should be cut into thin wedges or, better yet, bite-sized chunks. As for the cherry or grape tomatoes I sliced each one in half. That also makes them much easier to fork.

Radishes and carrots were non-starters — the radishes were too sharp and the carrots too hard. I tried mint, dill, oregano and parsley. The oregano was too strong even in finely chopped small amounts. The flavor of the dill didn't pair as well with the other ingredients as I had hoped. The parsley was lost and not worth the effort. The mint, however, blended well with the raw ingredients as well as the olives and cheese and could stand up to the vinaigrette. I used two tablespoons thinly sliced leaves, about ten medium.

Kalamata olives are widely available. They are a produce of Greece and, along with the feta, the jewels in the crown of the Greek salad. That being said they have big flavor and a little goes a long way. I found that they should be pitted and sliced so their flavor is incorporated into each bite. I also tried adding capers but they were voted down by my tasters. As for the feta cheese, fancy versions in specialty stores are good but the run-of-the-mill grocery store variety was actually better for this pedestrian application. Some feta is already crumbled which turned out to be dry and tasteless – purchase feta in a solid block.

I started the dressing with a quarter-cup of high quality extra-virgin olive oil and then played around with the acid and finally settled on 1 tablespoon white balsamic vinegar (or white wine vinegar) and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. To this mixture I added 1/4-teaspoon salt, black pepper to taste, and 1/8 teaspoon dried oregano (a necessary ingredient in this dish). To finish the salad, I tossed the greens and vegetables gently with the dressing and scattered the cheese and olives over the top. The recipe is quick, easy and a garden fresh impromptu supper or side dish.

CLASSIC GREEK SALAD

For best flavor and texture purchase a solid piece of feta cheese and crumble it yourself.

For The Dressing:

1 tablespoon white balsamic vinegar (or white wine vinegar)
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1/4 teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons best quality olive oil
1/8 teaspoon dried oregano
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

For The Salad:

2 medium heads romaine lettuce cores removed and sliced into 1 inch pieces, washed and dried, about ten cups or 1 medium head iceberg lettuce, core removed and sliced into 1-inch pieces, washed and dried or a combination of the two
1/2 large cucumber, peeled if skin is bitter, quartered lengthwise and cut into 1/4 inch slices
1/2 red or green bell pepper, cored, seeded, cut into thirds lengthwise and cut into 1/8 inch slices
3 scallions, dark green part removed and cut into 1/4-inch slices
2 medium tomatoes cut into bite-sized pieces or thin wedges or one-cup cherry tomatoes, halved
2 tablespoons thinly sliced mint leaves
8 to 10 Kalamata olives pitted, and sliced
3 ounces feta cheese, crumbled

1. Whisk together the vinegar, lemon juice and salt in a small bowl for about ten seconds to dissolve the salt. Add the remaining ingredients and whisk until slightly thickened and evenly colored. Set aside.

2. Place the first six ingredients (the lettuce through the mint leaves) in a large bowl. Remix the dressing and pour it around the perimeter of the bowl. Using your fingers or wooden salad utensils gently toss to coat the salad evenly with the dressing. Scatter the olives and cheese over the top and serve at once.

Don't think plot coherence or limitations to vulgarity. Think shadow plays that might remind you of a famous incident in "American Beauty" mistaken by that crazed Marine for unconventional sex and you'll be near the target. Think as many visual and aural outrages as 90 well-stacked minutes can encompass. The movie has as many misses as hits but so many hits, you're still laughing during the misses. With Mary Hart continuing as its host, "Entertainment Tonight" has remained a ratings winner for more than 20 years. Whatley harbors no hard feelings for Hart and even attended a recent "ET" Reunion in Hollywood.

"It was great to see everyone again. Mary was there, of course, as well as Tom Hallick, Robin Leach and even Marjorie Wallace," says Whatley. "Mary Hart is a real lady. She did nothing to get me fired and we've made a point of seeing each other over the years. The mentality at 'ET' at that time was that the female reporters should be fantasy babes in tight sweaters. That just wasn't me. The funny thing is that I fought for equality, but Mary ended up getting it. Mary even admitted it one day when the two of us were having lunch with Meredith MacRae. 'Dixie fought all the battles and I won the war,' Mary said."

Grow glorious grasses for year-round Beauty

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The lazy, hazy, days of summer are upon us as the month of August gets underway.

Occasional downpours have provided minor relief for parched plants but have done little to alleviate dry soils, only superficially dampening soil surfaces. High humidity prevails, which poses a major dilemma for gardeners. Despite insufficient rainfall, care must be taken not to over-water during these steamy, summer days, for once the soil becomes soggy, it is nearly impossible for it to dry out. This is particularly critical for container-grown plants, especially those grown in plastic pots or other nonporous containers. Daily watering may overly saturate the soil, suffocating root systems and causing plants to wilt and rot. For those who grow plants in clay soils, similar precautions are advisable. Automatic sprinkler systems may require adjustments to reduce dampness until humidity levels decline. It is probably best to underwater and keep plants on the verge of wilting than to soak heavy soils.

During these muggy, summer days, few of us enjoy laboring in our gardens. For busy gardeners or those who are intolerant of heat and humidity, low maintenance plants are particularly desirable. Among the hundreds of perennials on the market, daylilies, hosta, Siberian iris and ornamental grasses lead the list of easy care plants that seem to be the most reliable performers, once established.

Despite my initial reluctance to incorporate ornamental grasses into my garden designs, over the years I have been totally won over by their ease of culture, pleasantly surprised by their diversity and restrained growth and captivated by those that offer the added benefit of winter interest. As with most perennial plants, there are over-exuberant, rambunctious varieties but most cultivated grasses are much less likely to seed or spread than their wild counterparts. Most, instead, form lovely clumps that gradually increase in size from year to year and rarely require attention.

Tall upright clumps can be used as dramatic, architectural forms, focal points or accents, or as a hedge or backdrop in the perennial border. Their graceful lines and curves soften hardscapes (walks, foundations and fences) or connect plantings. Many respond to the gentlest breezes adding motion and sound to their visual appeal. Their delicate flower heads sway and rustle in the wind and provide considerable interest to the winter landscape. Clumps are particularly lovely when backlit by the sun causing them to shimmer and glow.

While the flower and seed heads of a great majority of ornamental grasses could hardly be described as spectacular, many are extremely appealing. Feathery, fluffy plumes, delicate, airy sprays and spikes, or pleasing inflorescences that resemble fuzzy caterpillars add beauty during the latter half of the growing season and often into the winter months.

While the flower and seed heads of a great majority of ornamental grasses could hardly be described as spectacular, many are extremely appealing. Feathery, fluffy plumes, delicate, airy sprays and spikes, or pleasing inflorescences that resemble fuzzy caterpillars add beauty during the latter half of the growing season and often into the winter months. A personal favorite commonly referred to as northern sea oats (Chasmanthium) produces attractive panicles of flattened seed heads resembling oats. Equally lovely are the nodding, heart-shaped seed heads of the quaking grasses (Briza), which dance with each passing breeze. This family of grasses features both annual and perennial forms. Few grasses rival the color and beauty of crimson fountain grass (Pennisetum setaceum rubrum), which adds stunning burgundy leaves and long, elegant, arching flowers suitable for planting in large containers or among perennials. It is especially dramatic planted alongside silver or blue foliage. Unfortunately this sensational ornamental grass is not hardy in our area but it is well worth the investment each spring, persisting well into autumn.

Perhaps the most popular and best known ornamental grasses are members of the Miscanthus family. These elegant grasses form singular clumps, mostly characterized by slender, slightly arching foliage that range from delicate-foliaged, 3-foot specimens like 'Yaku Jima' to giants such as M. floridulus reaching a height of up to 12 feet. They perform best in moist soils, full sun and good winter drainage but are tolerant of a wide range of conditions. Silky plumes shimmer in the autumn sun as they sway in the breeze and provide textural contrast in addition to sound and motion, especially during the stark winter months. Clumps enlarge gradually but sufficient space should be provided initially as their dense, fibrous root systems make division challenging. Spring division is preferred and an ax, saw or machete may be required to reduce the size of the clump. In late March to early April, these grasses should be sheared! as close to the ground as possible before new growth appears.

Numerous cultivars are available including the popular green and yellow-striped varieties known as Zebra (Zebrinus) and Porcupine grass (Strictus), the latter being more rigid and upright but less apt to flop during inclement weather. For a delicate, see-through quality, try the Maiden grasses including 'Gracillimus' or 'Morning Light', both standing about 4 to 5 feet when established with slender, slightly arching foliage. Russet-colored plumes appear in October and become beige and fluffy as they mature. Variegated members of this family produce sensational, eye-catching clumps or for a different color, look for 'Pupurascens' with purple-tinted leaves that become bronze and then red in autumn.

These low maintenance plants offer a dramatic contrast in form, color, texture and height making them valuable additions to any landscape plan. Plant one or more in your garden this season and enjoy their beauty for months and years to come.

Calendar AUGUST 8 - AUGUST 16, 2002

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7
The planet Venus enters Libra at 5:09 a.m., remaining there until September 7. The combination of an inactive Cancer moon and sun/Pluto alignment makes this morning prime for tackling projects that need redoing, refinishing, repair. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 12:27 p.m., when the moon enters Leo. Lunar alignments to Venus and Jupiter generate a lighter, brighter mood. Take some soul time today. Meditate, play music, create art or appreciate nature.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8
The dark side of a new moon brings a time for inner reflection, rest and solitude. Others may be feeling agitated, depressed. Don't overpersonalize. Take it slow and easy this morning. The new moon culminates at 3:15 p.m., 16-degrees of the sign Leo. At 4:26 p.m. the moon aligns with Mars, warning you maintain a cool, calm demeanor. The green light for new starts goes on at 4:30 p.m. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Jupiter makes this evening prime for social and romantic activities.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 9
Allow extra time to get where you are going this morning. You may encounter unanticipated obstacles, delays. The Leo moon opposes Uranus at 9:36 a.m. and becomes inactive until 2:03 p.m., when a Virgo moon takes over. It is okay to work or study late this evening. You can be most productive.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10
This day has its challenges. The combination of a Virgo moon and sun/Mars alignment may spark arguments, accidents. Stress management is important. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain an easygoing, peaceful attitude. Others may be irritable, difficult to get along with. Zero in on health and exercise regimens. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 11
A lunar alignment to Saturn makes for a rough start to this day. Avoid morning hassles or the blues. The Virgo moon becomes inactive at 8:01 a.m. until 2:38 p.m., when it enters Libra. At this time influences turn around completely, making the remainder of the day prime for all social activities, romantic rendezvous. The Libra moon forms easy contacts to Jupiter and Venus.

MONDAY, AUGUST 12
Take on a full agenda today. The green light is on for new starts across the board. The moon continues its travel in social Libra, forming harmonious alignments to Neptune, Pluto, Mars and the sun. Relationship matters may take center stage. You can work out problems you have been experiencing with others, renew relationships that have broken down. This is also an excellent day for meeting people, initiating key partnerships, making major commitments to others. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 13
Get an early start to this day. You can be most productive this morning. Plan to get important projects off the ground before 9:31 p.m., when the Libra moon aligns with Saturn. Favorable astrological conditions for new starts will not occur again until Friday. The Libra moon becomes inactive at 11:10 a.m. until 4:01 p.m., when it enters Scorpio. A lunar alignment to Jupiter this evening warns against overdoing or going to extremes on any level. Plan a quiet evening.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14
A Scorpio moon can make for a challenging two-day period. A positive attitude is essential. Don't get caught up in worries, obsessions or dwelling on past hurts, traumas. Mercury prepares to align with Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio. Choose your words carefully. Careless or indiscreet remarks will come back to haunt you. Signing contracts or making important decisions are definitely off limits. The best way to channel today's influences is to stay busy with practical projects. Hard work will pay off.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15
Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Scorpio moon forms stressful alignments to Mars, the sun and Uranus until 2:13 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Mercury forms a 90-degree contact to Pluto at 11:29 a.m. Relief arrives at 7:25 p.m., when the moon enters upbeat Sagittarius. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Neptune sets the stage for a romantic evening.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 16
A Sagittarius moon generates a relaxed, optimistic mood today and tomorrow. It is okay to initiate new activities, make long-range plans, set new goals. If you have work projects to accomplish, you must have a clear plan of action and stick to it. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. There is one rough spot in effect between 7:54-10:54 p.m., when the moon aligns with Pluto. Slow down. Think before you do or say something you will later regret.

Friends try to cope with fatal accident

Teen is remembered for his leadership, compassion

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Last year's Boston College High School yearbook said the 300-member Class of 2002, then juniors, was ready to "begin their senior year in a solid brick of brotherhood."

That "solid brick" is what the young men will have to draw upon to deal with the unspeakable tragedy that befell their classmate, Paul "PJ" Tendowicz, whose youthful exuberance on a blistering summer afternoon led to an accident that cost him his life.

Area families of B.C. High students opened their living rooms Tuesday night so grieving teens could gather and find support as they tried to make sense out of the day's events. Trendowicz's many Cohasset friends also reacted in disbelief as the news spread throughout town.

Yesterday dozens of teens thought about their friend as they sat on the rocks near Cunningham Bridge and looked out at the water.

The temperature had reached the mid-90s by 4 p.m., Tuesday as Trendowicz and his buddies were cooling off — doing what so many teens do — playing in the water under Cunningham Bridge on Atlantic Avenue at the mouth of Little Harbor.

But the game of "knee boarding" that involved riding a small, fiberglass surfboard on their knees back and forth along the rapids under the bridge while grabbing a hold of the rope, which the kids had attached to the underside of the structure, went terribly wrong.

Trendowicz, 18, went under after his leg apparently got caught up in the rope. His friends, who called 9-1-1, desperately attempted to save him from drowning. They borrowed a knife from a fisherman to cut the rope. Trendowicz floated down aways with the incoming tide and the teens pulled him up on shore across from Shute's barn on Atlantic Avenue.

Trendowicz, who graduated from B.C. High in June and lived around the corner from Cunningham Bridge on Beach Street with his parents Paul and

School project a slam dunk

New gyms, facilities will open for first day

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Rob Spofford and Simon Tempest are too big to go to school.

But you wouldn't know it from their behavior. The two men, who have been closely involved with the town's $42 million school building projects, are just like two kids when it comes to being excited about something they've helped accomplish.

Spofford, who is the chairman of the School Building Committee, and Tempest, the project manager, readily admit they didn't do this alone. The phased-in building projects are the result of years of planning, architects, town committees, contractors, subcontractors, hundreds of construction workers, and the generosity of the taxpayers.

During a walk-through at the Deer Hill School and middle-high school this week, the Mariner got a sneak preview at what is bound to make kids' eyes nearly pop out of their heads on opening day Sept. 4.

You have to step back in time

Haddad passes five-year mark

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Eighteen months was the life span most gave Cohasset's first Town Manager back in 1997.

After all, the person who accepted the job would be taking a post that his or her future bosses had passionately argued against at Town Meeting just a few months earlier.

But that was 5-1/2 years ago. Mark Haddad, the then 33-year-old former Littleton town administrator, is now 38 and as CEO of Cohasset, has overseen an unprecedented amount of change in a relatively short period of time. Some of the changes have even surprised him.

"I have less hair and what is left is more gray," jokes Haddad, who passed the five-year mark on Aug. 4.

Turning the clock back reveals different times in this town of some 7,000 people.

Weekly selectmen's meetings easily went on beyond four hours as the board became increasingly bogged down with every little thing among its bigger decisions.

When then town administrator Gregory Doyon decided to

AvalonBay files for permit

Hearing starts on Sept. 16

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Need some summer reading?

Then you might saunter over to Town Hall to take a gander at the three-inch thick file from Cohasset AvalonBay Inc.

About a dozen additional packets were delivered to Town Hall on Tuesday afternoon to ensure there would be enough for the various town boards, and a copy available for public viewing at the Town Clerk's office.

Neatly secured with rubber bands, the file includes engineering plans and drawings, plus – a soon-to-be best seller in terms of popular reading around town, a booklet titled, "Report to Accompany Comprehensive Permit" that provides a project synopsis including storm-water management, environmental assessment and utility analysis along with a corporate overview of Avalon.

As expected, Avalon has filed for a comprehensive permit and is now officially the town's third "40B project." Chapter 40B is the state's affordable housing law.

The previous two projects, the 60-unit Crystal Woods that straddled the Cohasset-Scituate line near Ledgewood Drive and Deck Point, 119 King St., with 128 condos were approved with conditions in 1989 and 1987 respectively, but were never built. The real estate market took a nose dive in the late 1980s, although it's not clear if that was a contributing factor.

The Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals will conduct a public hearing on the proposed Avalon project at 7:30 p.m., Monday, Sept. 16 in the selectmen's office. The hearing will be televised.

At the ZBA meeting on Monday, board members described the upcoming "40B process" as daunting. The Avalon project is controversial because of its size and the fact it would be built on one of the town's last tracks of industrially zoned land.

Under 40-B, developers can skirt some of the town's zoning laws in exchange for providing 20-25 percent of the development as affordable housing. Municipalities are vulnerable to comprehensive permits if they have less than the state-mandated 10 percent of their housing stock as affordable by state standards. Cohasset only has 76 units of affordable housing and with 2,700 households, is well below the 10 percent threshold.

The ZBA has hired a stenographer to transcribe the hearings and plans to use Town Counsel and engineering consultants in an advisory capacity. ZBA members also want to participate in a walk-around of the property before the hearing.

"We don't want to be inundated with too many advisors," Chairman Woody Chittick cautioned.

The ZBA also floated the idea of a "working session" with other town boards and officials to air their issues before Sept. 16.

Avalon proposes building 254 apartments in two phases on 62 acres off Route 3A [across from Atlantic Bagel]. The comprehensive permit application is for the first phase that consists of 200 apartments located in 18 buildings offering a range of one-, two- and three-bedroom floor plan. All apartments will have private entry doors directly to the outside. A clubhouse, pool and spa, fitness center and picnic areas will be located throughout the community, Avalon said.

The entrance to the complex that is planned for the northeast corner of the site will be via a driveway from an existing curb cut on King Street. The proposed driveway will roughly follow the existing site drive, and will loop around the entire community. The clubhouse will sit on top of the entry drive, where the drive splits to the left and to the right.

According to the report the Avalon complex will consist of eight two-story buildings and 10, two-story split buildings (with terrace-level apartments) that will house a total of 200 apartments (58 one-bedroom, 120 two-bedroom, and 22 three-bedroom); a clubhouse/leasing office; maintenance office and garage; and recycling center. Parking will be provided at a ratio of slightly two spaces per apartment. Of the 403 spaces, 60 will be garage spaces and the remainder will be surface spaces. The garages will be integrated into the six buildings with 16 apartments.

William M. McLaughlin, regional vice-president of development with Avalon, said the news the Federal Home Loan Bank's has shut down its loan program for 40-B projects, at least temporarily, won't impact the Cohasset project.

"That has no impact on Avalon Bay and our process in Cohasset," McLaughlin said. "We generally have received our site approval and done our financing through the Mass. Housing Financing Agency (MHFA) and that will be the case here.

"So no impact on us, although interesting with respect to the 40B debate overall," McLaughlin said.

Correction to lightning story

A story in last week's Mariner about the sewer control panels zapped by lightning should have said Cohasset follows the state electrical code regarding grounding to the water pipe. The town enforces the state code, and does not have its own rules, according to the wiring inspector.

Upcoming meetings

Meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise noted. Call the Town Clerk at 781-383-4100 for more information.

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Tuesday, Aug. 13:

Board of Health, 7 p.m., Aug. 28

Conservation Commission, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 22

Planning Board, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 21

School Building Committee, 7:30 a.m., Aug. 21 & 28

Selectmen, 7:30 p.m., Aug. 20

Zoning Board of Appeals, 7:30 p.m., Sept. 16

Water Commission, 8 p.m., Aug. 22 at the King Street plant

Voter registration

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting, or Election Day, may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote; if you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the State Primary Election (which will be held Tuesday, Sept. 17, 2002) is Wednesday, Aug. 28 from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's office.

Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before Aug. 28.

Waterfield group on meeting agenda

The Waterfield Group, the firm hired for the village revitalization project, will attend Tuesday's selectmen's meeting to update selectmen on the plans. Selectmen urge interested citizens to attend.

Red Lion hearing

Selectmen continued the hearing on the "change of premises" request at the Red Lion Inn until Sept. 10 to allow more time for the inn and abutters to resolve some of the issues raised at the initial hearing. The inn has asked for patio dining and more tables in the room off the main lobby.

Bradley hours

State Representative Garrett Bradley, D–Hingham, will hold district office hours, Thursday Aug. 22, at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall — upstairs, 88 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 5– 6 p.m. If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with Bradley, call (617) 722-2120.

Saving a home for all creatures great and small

32-acre forestland is eyed by CPC

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

If you've taken a walk through Wheelright Park recently, chances are you've wandered off town property and onto private property.

Not that you would have known.

The 32-acre parcel, known as the Barnes property, looks very much like its neighbor to the north. It's all forest.

If the town's Community Preservation Committee has its way, it could soon be owned by the town.

Under member Richard Silvia's lead, the committee has begun negotiations with the Barnes estate to purchase the land to preserve the sanctity of the overall forest.

"The town has been trying to do this for a number of years," said Silvia. "This is a deep forest core habitat, which is important because it is means that it is one big self-sustaining unit."

The Barnes property is just to the south of Wheelwright Park and part of a continuous forest area that stretches from the edges of the Holly Hill Farm to the fringes of development off North Main and Forest streets.

"One of the things that I think Rich explained to us last time was that when you have a wilderness property like this one, if you build in it, you don't just lose the property behind it, you lose hundreds of yards behind it," said member David McMorris.

The deep forest aspect of the land makes it invaluable to the survival of the delicate ecosystem within.

"They said they were surprised to see it," said Silvia of the ecologists who studied the land. "The way they find out is by the critters that live in there. This is a deep forest habitat, and it used to be a much larger one."

By purchasing the land, the town can ensure that the fauna in the area will not be disrupted.

"If you break this off, that may be just enough to (do damage)," said Silvia. "(The Barnes property) could be the heart of it right here, where certain critters live. If it is broken off, this becomes, to use an ecological, technical term, an edge habitat. And as an edge habitat a lot of the other critters can't live there."

"As an edge habitat a lot of the other critters can't live there."
— Rich Silvia, CPC committee

That could change the face of the surrounding areas as the displaced animals search for new homes.

"Those critters just don't disappear," said Silvia. "There are coyotes, and all kinds of things in there. A lot of birds and hawks can only live in there, along with snakes and reptiles. Everything. Those that do well here are going to have to go somewhere else — the ones that can make it — because some of them aren't going to make it."

Aside from the wildlife, the property is an active part of the town's water supply.

"This is a part of the Sohier Street Wellfield contribution area," said Silvia. "This is all downhill running right into James Brook."

The Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private organization within the town that purchases ecologically important land within the town, has pledged up to $250,000 for the project.

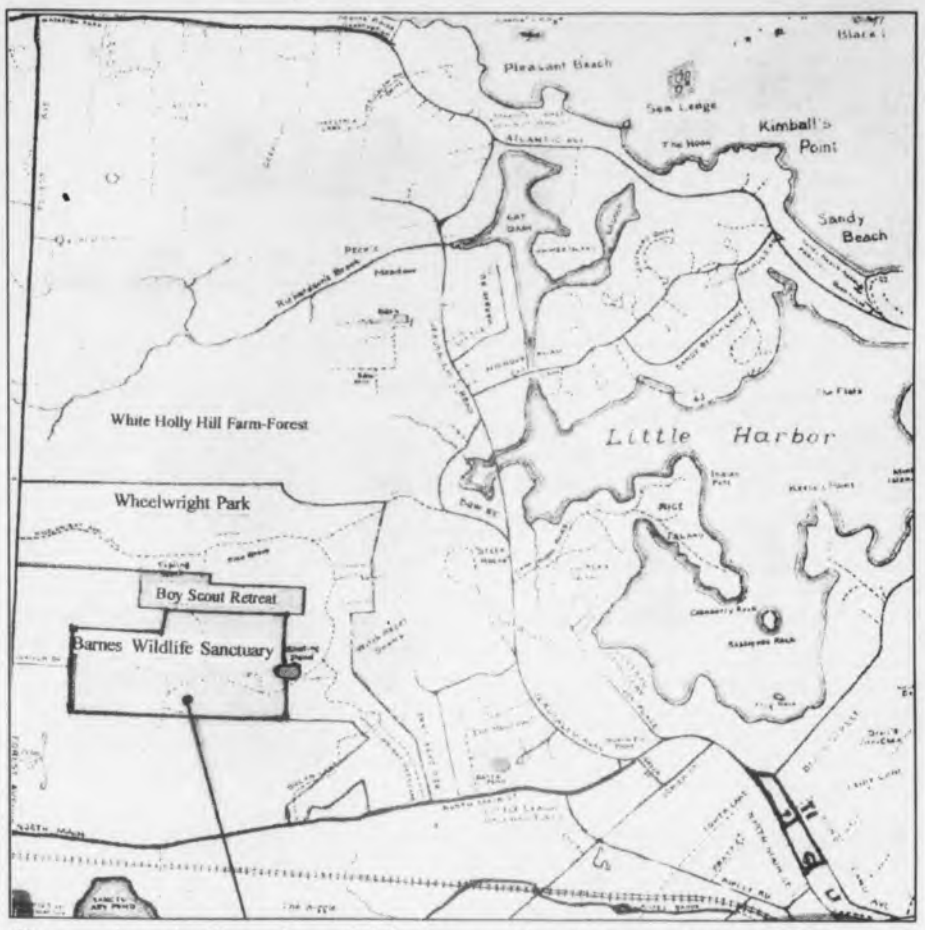
"To demonstrate our commitment to this acquisition, the Trust voted on July 22, 2002 to provided a significant sum towards the purchase price," said Richard J. Avery, treasurer of the organization in a letter to the CPC. "As an outright donation, we will give $100,000. To encourage donations from citizens at large and other groups, we have committed an additional $150,000 to be used as matching funds."

The nine-member board, formed under the Community Preservation Act adopted by the town at the ballot box a year ago utilizes funds from a 1.5 percent real estate tax surcharge and state matching funds. According to Michael Buckley, the town finance director, the fund should have about $640,000 by this fall's special Town Meeting, although some of that money has been earmarked for projects approved last spring. The CPC has the ability to bring projects – such as land purchases – directly to the town meeting

Silvia said he began looking into the possibility of the town buying the Barnes property [to be called the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary] after the spring annual Town Meeting. The area is owned by members of the Barnes family, whose father William T. Barnes was Cohasset's long-time, beloved highway surveyor when he died in 1955.

"I had coffee with Merle Brown and Arthur Lehr, who explained that piece of land would be valuable to the town to protect Wheelwright Park and the whole wildlife sanctuary," he recalled. "I looked into it and got pretty involved and got the Barnes (family) to agree to give the town the opportunity to pursue it.

"Failure to purchase the property would cause irreparable hard to the entire forest and our heritage," Silvia added.



This map shows the 32-acre Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary that the Community Preservation Committee hopes the town will purchase. The land is part of a deep forest core habitat of roughly 230 acres.

Under the Community Preservation Act, 10 percent of the monies accumulated in a town's Community Preservation Fund must go toward preserving open space, another 10 percent toward historic preservation, and 10 percent toward community housing. The remaining 70 percent can be spent for any of the above and recreation. Any money in the fund that is not appropriated can be banked for future years. Borrowing is also allowed with payments for interest and principal coming out of the fund, as could be the case with the Barnes property.

At the annual Town Meeting, voters approved the following expenditures from the Community Preservation Fund:

- $150,000 for design work, plans and construction at the historical society's Maritime Museum and Capt. John Wilson House in the village;
- $100,000 to supplement the money the town and Little League will provide to construct two ball fields at the Gavel Pits;
- $600,000 to be borrowed over 15 years to pay for an estimated half the cost of three lots off Beach Street adjacent to Great Brewster Woods.

Mercury contamination in Aaron Reservoir fish

The Mass. Department of Public Health has issued a Public Health Fish Consumption Advisory for the Aaron River Reservoir, because of mercury contamination in fish.

Mercury has not been detected in the water itself, but has gone up the food chain to contaminate the fish.

Children under 12, pregnant women, nursing mothers, and women of childbearing age who may become pregnant should refrain from consuming any fish caught from the Aaron River Reservoir, to prevent exposure to mercury for developing fetuses, nursing infants, and young children.

The general public should not consume any chain pickerel or yellow perch caught from Aaron River Reservoir.

The general public should limit consumption of all other fish species caught from Aaron River Reservoir to two meals per month.

A sign with the above warning has been posted by the Water Commission at the entrance to the Reservoir at the end of Beechwood Street.

School project is a slam dunk

to fully understand. The two venerable old buildings which were approaching the half-century mark were like well-loved, old sofas — still struggling to be comfortable and do the job while dealing with a complete breakdown in infrastructure. Everything from the tiles on the floor, lockers on the walls, heating and wiring systems needed an overhaul in the outdated buildings..

Construction on "new" schools is not finished but certain phases of the construction projects are complete and school will be able to be conducted as work continues in both buildings.

But what will be ready is so spectacular and so much fun in the schools' brand-new wings, that few should mind the inconvenience of going to school in a construction zone for the second year in a row.

Highlights of both schools are the state-of-the-art gymnasiums that will be ready for opening day. That's not to underplay the new, spacious color-coordinated classrooms, computer labs, other welcoming educational areas and new bathrooms, but the architects scored a "slam dunk" with the gymnasiums.

At Deer Hill, it's actually called a "gym-atorium", an air-conditioned full-court gym that can double as an 850-capacity auditorium with a big stage on one side to provide wider viewing area for productions that are sure to spring from many creative imaginations.

"We heard the community say, they wanted more space for performance," says Spofford, who stressed the school projects are "on time and on budget."

Spofford says the town may hold the fall Special Town Meeting at Deer Hill to showcase the facility to the community. The new wing also features a full kitchen for community use. The doors to the corridor leading the rest of the school lock, so community groups such as Summer Playground or basketball teams can use the new wing and not have access to the rest of the building.

At the middle-high school, the Olympic-sized gym will be the envy of other South Shore teams that compete there. The locker and shower rooms are brand new – a far cry from the smelly, "dungeon-like" locker rooms in the basement of the old gym. The new two-story entranceway, which is behind the building and where the buses will drop students off, invites you into a lobby with a grand staircase. The new cafeteria and state-of-the-art kitchen that will prepare food for the town's three schools bears no resemblance to their predecessors. This wing can also be used by the community when school is not in session.

The middle-high school also boasts a TV studio, new music and art rooms. And it will be hard to keep pupils out of Deer Hill's bright, large new library. And the coordinated colors in the corridors and classrooms at Deer Hill change with each wing for the different grades, so the kids will always know where they belong.

The work inside the walls and above the ceilings, although not as thrilling, is all being redone including all the wiring and duct work. Energy-efficient lighting is being installed in both buildings.

"The what is called a gut rehab in this business," says Tempest, who is particularly proud of the masonry work on the exterior old brick, which is being cleaned and ground, a process called "repointing" to look like new.

The middle and high school wings of the middle-high school will be entirely separate, including having separate entrances; the school is laid out so the shared areas are between the two "schools."

Spofford and Tempest know their way around the buildings and are animated when they describe everything from the cafeteria tables and student desks to the colors and material used in the flooring.

But for the "layman," the tour was literally "dizzying." With areas being moved around, torn down and new wings – without guides, it would have been easy to get lost.

But, never mind, the kids and teachers will have no trouble finding their way around after a few hours.

Beefing up the fire flows is Water Commission priority

Some small pipe to be replaced

This Fall, the Water Commission will be replacing about 1.2 miles of undersized water pipes throughout Cohasset.

"This $1.55 million project is needed to replace undersized pipes in areas with insufficient fire flows," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "These areas were prioritized based on the existing Capital Improvement Plan for the distribution system and based on recent fire flow tests we conducted throughout the town last fall.

"This work will improve public safety to the town and will result in better water service to our ratepayers," McNabb said.

These projects will also include the installation of 12 new fire hydrants and the replacement of 7 existing fire hydrants, continuing the Water Commission's ongoing fire hydrant replacement program.

RFP's have been issued and the proposals will received and opened at 10 am today (Aug. 15). On Aug. 22, the Water Commission plans to review the proposals and select the contractors for the project. Work will begin after Labor Day and continue through next summer, and includes:

Hammond Ave – replacement of 150 feet of undersized 6-inch pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe, installation of 870 feet of new water pipe to create a loop with Locust Road, and drainage improvements to remedy the existing drainage problem between Hammond and Locust Road.

Hobart/Lothrop Lane – replacement of 2,755 feet of undersized pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe.

Beechwood Street – replacement of 300 feet of undersized pipes with 8-inch ductile iron pipe and replacement of undersized 6-inch valves with 10-inch valves at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Doane Street that will help improve water pressure and flow on Beechwood Street, Doane Street and Aaron River Road.

Bound Brook Lane – replacement of 525 feet of undersized pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe and the installation of a fire hydrant at the end of the street.

Red Gate Lane – replacement of 840 feet of undersized pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe.

Sheldon Road – replacement of 540 feet of undersized pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe.

Windsor Road and Westgate Lane – replacement of 925 ft. of undersized pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe.

Nichols Road – repair/replacement of pipeline across Cat Dam to fix leak and restore distribution loop

The project has been divided into three separate contracts – with Hammond Avenue in one contract (because of the complexities of the associated drainage project), Hobart and Lothrop Lanes in another (because of unique issues for that area), and the remainder in the third contract . "In the Hammond Avenue project," said McNabb, "the Water Department will conduct drainage improvements for the town, which will reimburse the Water Department at the fall Special Town Meeting. We will then use those funds, which came from water revenue, for additional water system improvements."

The Water Commission will also conduct major improvements to the Lily Pond water Treatment Plant.

"In the fall," said McNabb, "we will replace the motors and pumps in the finished water pumps and will install variable frequency drives (VFD's), which will allow the Lily Pond Treatment Plant to produce water continually. Right now the plant can produce finished water only on an intermittent basis, requiring the plant operator to stop and start the pumps to produce water."

"Flow-paced chemical feeds will also be installed at the plant," he said, "which will provide partial automation and more consistent mixture of the treatment chemicals, further improving plant operations."

The funding for these projects came from a $2,000,000 loan that was authorized by the March Annual Town Meeting.

"We were able to afford the principle and interest on this loan without raising the water rates because of our careful management of the Water Department debt and good financial planning," McNabb said.

Since 1994 the Water Commission has rehabilitated more than 12 miles of the 36 miles of water mains in the distribution system, has made numerous improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, and has completed long-range Capital Improvement Plans for the distribution system and treatment plant.

"We also just recently completed a comprehensive Surface Water Supply Protection Plan, which will help guide our efforts over the next ten years for protection of watershed quality," McNabb said.

The Extension School faculty include unique and especially gifted instructors, who can guide you on a journey of wisdom and knowledge.

Friends try to cope with fatal accident

Julie and younger brother Dan, somehow got entangled in the line, police said.

Police Officer Brian Curran started CPR at the scene until Cohasset rescue came.

Capt. Mark Trask said when the ambulance arrived, Trendowicz was not breathing. and paramedics tried to revive him and tried to establish a cardiac rhythm with the equipment they carry. MedFlight was called to Milliken Field, where Trendowicz was transported, but a decision was made not to take the youth by helicopter but transport him by ambulance to South Shore Hospital where he later died. It was not clear why the helicopter was not used, but the decision could have been weather-related.

As paramedics heroically tried to revive Trendowicz at the scene, his distraught friends stood by in shock while others pounded the sand with their fists., unable to believe what had occurred. Scituate ambulance was called in to check out one teen who was so overcome with emotion.

Trendowicz, who planned to attend Bentley College, attended the Cohasset Middle School and moved to town from New Jersey when he was in elementary school. He was captain of the B.C. High varsity lacrosse team.

"He was a great captain and a great leader, the kids really respected him," said B.C. High Athletic Director John Bartlett. "He was an excellent lacrosse player, but more importantly, he was a better human being – he was a real terrific kid who also did well academically.

"He was a terrific B.C. High student," Bartlett said. "We are going to miss him, we are all in shock by this devastating news."

Cohasset Middle-High School athletic director Ron Ford describes Trendowicz as a "great kid."

"He participated in my basketball camps and I had him as a student in the middle school," Ford recalled. "Even after he went to B.C. High, he came back to our high school games to support our kids.

"There was always a smile on his face," he said.

Trendowicz also coached other children in the Volunteer Youth Lacrosse League and took part in the Appalachia Service Project, through which he helped build homes for the poor.

Visiting hours are from 4-8 p.m. today (Aug. 15) at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

The Rev. John R. Mulvehill said at 8 p.m., classmates will accompany the body to the church for a prayer service. The funeral mass, with Fr. Mulvehill as celebrant, is 11 a.m. Friday at St. Anthony's Church. There will a reception in the parish center following the service.

"He was a real leader," Fr. Mulvehill said. "Paul affected the lives of many people."

Mulvehill said Trendowicz was active in the campus ministry program at B.C. High, and other members of that program are expected to take part in Friday's service.

Donations in Trendowicz's memory may be sent to Boston College High School, 150 Morrissey Blvd., Boston, MA 02125.

Dozens of teenagers grieve for their friend Paul "PJ" Trendowicz at Cunningham Bridge on Atlantic Avenue where PJ drowned in a tragic accident Tuesday afternoon.

Useful tips to prevent contracting West Nile Virus this summer

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

West Nile Virus (WVN) was detected for the first time this year on the South Shore last month in a dead blue jay in East Weymouth.

State and local health officials are strongly encouraging residents to take precautionary measures even though there has been only one incident involving WNV and humans in the state this year. Health officials believe the Massachusetts woman contracted the virus on a trip out of state.

There is no evidence that a person can get the virus from handling live or infected birds, however, although barehanded contact should be avoided when handling dead animals or birds. Gloves or double plastic bags should be worn.

The virus cannot be transmitted from person to person.

More than 200 dead birds have been tested in Massachusetts this year, with 32 testing positive.

The threat is highest for the elderly and people with chronic diseases.

Fortunately, as nights grow cooler and the first frost arrives, the mosquito population dies off.

But until that time, the health officials caution residents to avoid outdoor activities between dusk and dawn whenever possible, since that is the time during which mosquitoes are most active.

Long-sleeved shirts and long pants are recommended for those going outside during that period.

Mosquito repellents should contain DEET (the chemical N-Ndiethyl-metatoluamide), following the directions on the label. DEET can be toxic if overused and should never be applied to infants. Repellents with DEET concentrations above 10-15 percent for children and 30-35 percent for adults should be avoided.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health has a toll-free information line, 1-868-MASS WNV (627-7968), to facilitate the reporting and collection of dead birds. Information on WNV, personal protection measures, and pesticide information is also provided.

The culex species of mosquitoes, which breeds in stagnant water in containers, gutters, bird baths, discarded tires, trash cans, and untreated swimming pools, is believed to be the biggest transmitter of WNV.

The culex species thrives in water drainage systems, particularly in storm drains, catch basins, and sewage treatment facilities.

To avoid breeding mosquitoes of any type, homeowners are advised to eliminate standing water around the home or in the neighborhood. Mosquitoes will breed in any puddle or standing water that remains for more than four days.

The board of health also recommends other ways individuals can prevent mosquito bites and providing conditions that could lead to mosquito breeding. Those include:

- Fixing holes in screens and making sure they are tightly attached to all doors and windows;
- Disposing of or regularly emptying any metal cans, plastic containers, ceramic pots, bird baths, children's pools, trash cans, and any other outside water-holding containers;
- Paying special attention to discarded tires, which are common places for mosquitoes to breed;
- Drilling holes in recycling containers left outdoors to allow them to drain;
- Turning over plastic wading pools and wheelbarrows when not in use; and
- Keeping swimming pools clean and properly chlorinated and removing standing water from pool covers.

For further information, call the Board of Health at 781-383-4116, the Mass. Department of Public Health hotline listed above, or by visiting http://www.state.us/dph.

FORMULA ONE

Garrett Canney son of Barb & John Canney; and Nicole Robbins, daughter of Wayne & Pam Robbins, completed their Spring League, each receiving a trophy in race car driving! Garrett came in third, Nicole in fourth, with only 2 points separating them!

Nicole and Garrett are now competing in the summer league which includes races, on the individual tracks, the joint track and the outdoor track, at the new F-1 facility in Bridgewater.

Wayne & Nicole, "The Racing Robbins" competed in the Father's Day F-1 Challenge, where kids competed against each other and Dads against Dads. The Robbins Family had a great day! Wayne finished third among the dad's, which was great considering he lost 2 points for a brief stop in the penalty box for rough racing!

STUDENT RESEARCH CENTER

The Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research (CCSCR) Benefit Luncheon on Aug. 5 drew a large, enthusiastic crowd at Bernard's Restaurant.

The funds raised will go towards the renovation of the Hagerty House on Parker Avenue. Cohasset will soon have a student research center as approved by the selectmen last week. This is certainly an exciting time for this endeavor!

HONORS GRADUATE

GO BLUE!

What do you get when you mix skill, hard work, dedication, teamwork, and fun? You get the eight-year-old "Cohasset Blue" all-star summer baseball team! After a fabulous 6-1-1 record in the Braintree National Friendship Summer League regular season, they beat two competitive teams from Braintree in the playoffs to end up playing their rival Whitman in the South Division Championship game. After a very tight game that came right down to the last inning, Cohasset lost to Whitman 6-4.

The "Cohasset Blue" team, their families, and coaches Mike Kearney, Kevin Lewis, Doug McNary, Bill Allard, and "team helper" Lindsey Allard, had loads of fun traveling around the South Shore in search of ball fields, playgrounds (to entertain younger siblings), take-out food restaurants, and ice cream stands. This extraordinary team was eager, determined, and dedicated to learning and experiencing the competitive game of baseball. They can't wait for another exciting season next summer!

Genevra Blake MacPhail

The players were: Patrick Kearney, Patrick Lewis, Christian Allard, Jamie Timothy, EJ Culhane, Christopher Carpenter, Mitchell McNary, Dean McNary, Nate Brown, Dan Barnes, and Vinny Calorio.

Sailing Club appeals to all ages

Intergenerational race is Sunday

On Sunday, Aug. 18 from 5-8 p.m., the Cohasset Sailing Club will conduct the final race in its Stanton adult/junior racing series for parents or senior family members crewing for their children at the helm, just outside Cohasset Harbor.

Traditionally known for its children's program, CSC's adult programs have ballooned in size during the past two seasons. The most dynamic changes occurred in the one-third increase in classroom students and in the doubling of racers, particularly in the Stanton Series.

"The program provides a critical link between the adult and children's programs. A child skippers the boat while the parent crews," says Stanton Series coordinator Jim Porter. "We are now expanding the Stanton series to include those members and children who are at the entry point in the racing experience."

Porter crews for his son, Nate, a seventh-grader. The younger Porter represents a third generation of Porter participants in the series.

Vice Commodore Bob Cunningham leads the adult side of the club operations. According to Cunningham, "We have responded administratively to the up-tick in popularity."

Stanton Series coordinator

The adult classes have received a serious "makeover" this year, especially at the intermediate level. Commodore Bob Deutsch has engaged long-time South Shore racer and Cohasset resident Jack Keniley to energize the advanced training. Keniley is a self-described "boat rat" who grew up sailing in Scituate and now races for the Cohasset Yacht Club.

Matt McLaughlin stands at the intersection of the kids' and adult programs. During the weekday he fills the role of Head Instructor for the youngsters. He also teaches the beginner class for adults, a classroom populated with parents whose children Matt oversees during the daytime program.

Veteran Mass. Bay sailor Bill Everett of Norwell has also been hired to monitor boat safety and movement during the weekend free sailing period.

The adult sailing classes have stimulated another area of growth; a new group of middle-aged sailors who have joined the racing events held every weekend in Cohasset Harbor. Tom Shaughnessey, himself a former student of the sailing club's adult program, directs the logistics for these individuals, who have opted to make sailboat racing a summer passion.

Jack Keniley, instructor of the Adult Intermediate Class at the Cohasset Sailing Club, demonstrates the finer points of sail.

Leaks in balloon festival

This weekend's Tedeschi Li'l Peach balloon festival at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station never quite soared the way many folks anticipated. The main attraction — the hot air balloons themselves — didn't live up to expectations.

And that has the critics saying as a balloon festival the event was a bust.

Clearly, if the first festival is to become an annual one, many changes will have to be made. But let's start with the most obvious — the lack of balloon time. Opening night on Friday at least featured a limited number of colorful balloons attempting to make the ascension at dusk. A few, including the impressive Continental Airlines balloon, actually flew over the crowd to provide some excitement. By and large, however, the ascension Friday was a disappointment in that there weren't even near the 60 balloons touted by organizers. It was more like 15 or 20, but they did put on a colorful show, albeit, a brief one.

Judging from the feedback we've received in recent days — and it is significant — Friday's showing was far more spectacular than anything people saw on Saturday and Sunday.

Howard Freeman, executive producer of the event for the New Jersey-based company hosting the show, acknowledges there was clear disappointment at the lack of balloon sightings. But, he says, that's not necessarily because so few went up. In fact, he shows figures where balloons did go up and should have been viewed for each ascension over the weekend. His team is already reworking plans for next year, including changing the sight line for the launching. He's convinced the Naval Air Station is a workable site and the company can provide better viewing for future balloon ascensions.

We're pleased that issue, along with a host of others pointed out by people, are being addressed. The organizers already have plans to enhance parking (with more lights and a shuttle bus on the lot), increase education on the weather and its impact on ballooning, and smoothing out traffic issues.

But there is one thing they can't control — the wind and weather.

All the other elements which created for a less than desirable showing for some of the 92,000 people who went to the three-day weekend should all be ironed out in time for next year. We appreciate that the organizers have candidly and with forthrightness acknowledged some of the glaring problems. They are committed to this site for two more years and the sponsors, Tededschi and Li'l Peach, are on board for five years.

It's hard to answer all the critics, but clearly organizers know after this first event that the festival needs serious fine-tuning. People expected a lot for the money they paid to enter the event and to park.

The festival, however, despite the lack of balloon air time, did provide its share of amusement and entertainment. Susan Tedeschi, Hall and Oates and K.C. and the Sunshine Band got the place rocking and the crowds enjoyed the concerts. The amusement rides and food vendors, although pricey, offered plenty of family fun.

Without those balloons, though, it was just another county fair and organizers have a lot riding on making sure that sentiment isn't the case in the future. As the media sponsor, we at Community Newspaper Company will do our part to highlight the successes and challenges so the balloon festival is a South Shore event not to miss.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Rec says thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Recreation Department will soon conclude another summer of services for children and adults.

The Recreation Department and staff wish to thank the many individuals and families who participated in a multitude of programs, events and activities during the summer as well as over the past years.

We are also indebted to many other town departments and individuals who have lent their time, effort and experience in support of our services. Without their day to day help, the success of our programs would be severely compromised.

Thank you to Mark Haddad, Town Manager; Bob Egan, Building Commissioner; Joe Cochran and Derek Lincoln, Maintenance Division—DPW; Carl Sistito, DPW Superintendent; Andy Swanson, Tree, Park and Cemetery Division—DPW; Steve Wigmore, Electrical Inspector; the Cohasset School Department, Dr. Ted Malvey, the superintendent, administrative and custodial staffs of the school department.

Our very sincere thanks to the Cohasset Police Department, Bob Jackson, Chief of Police and the Cohasset Police Association for their magnanimous efforts and donations keeping our summer safe as well as fun. Thanks also to the Cohasset Fire Department, Roger Lincoln, Fire Chief for their support and involvement with the children and programs.

David Wadsworth is thanked for providing our Playground Program youngsters with tours of our Maritime Museum.

Thank you to Kenny Thayer who spoke with the children at Playground and brought his race cars for the kids to see.

We thank Linda Farrag, R.N., for providing our staff with CPR training. Also, we thank Rachel McElroy for her water-safety seminar.

In addition, thank you to Cohasset Plaza Liquors, Shaw's and Stop & Shop Supermarkets for their donations to the Playground Program's annual barbeque.

At the risk of missing anyone who has supported our efforts, as the list is long each year, we offer both apology and sincere gratitude.

Avalon Express

TO THE EDITOR:

The Avalon Express has pulled into town with their visions of how our future and town should be.

Using all the right words and useful organizational principles to get their vision across to all of us town-folk. Similar to the traveling salesman of long ago. Pull the wagon into towns to sell their medicine to cure all our pains, but just left a bad taste in your mouth.

We are dealing with a business, whose business is to develop, redevelop and acquire land to manage luxury apartment complexes not housing that is affordable.

We already have a percentage of housing, why not take back our property and offer a preference to the citizens of Cohasset.

Along with our town officials and local builders, build traditional two family houses that look and feel like the Town of Cohasset. This will bring our percentage up to the fair housing standards and we will be in charge of our own future.

I feel we have stepped over the line of "politically correct."

We as a community should get together and work on a solution for the citizens who live in this town that do not own property but live here because it is home.

Benefit was big success

TO THE EDITOR:

On Monday, Aug. 5, a Benefit Luncheon was held at Bernard's Restaurant to support the establishment of the Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research (CCSCR).

As the organizers of this event, we would like to express our sincere appreciation to those in the community that made this fundraiser such a success.

Thank you Bernard and Sheila O'Neil of Bernard's for the use of your restaurant, and the preparation of a fabulous meal. Our thanks also goes to Dunkin' Donuts at Cohasset Plaza for their kind donation to our benefit. Our special guest speaker, Mark Hall of Newbury Hypnotherapy, created a relaxed atmosphere for the luncheon; his lecture was a generous contribution to our worthy cause.

We are very pleased that the selectmen gave their approval to the CCSCR, and hope all those that participated are proud they were a part of it.

HEALTH NOTES

Will suing solve our obesity problems?

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Obesity! Sue the perpetrators.

Well, we've finally found something to do with the excessive numbers of lawyers our vaunted education system has produced! In a sort of convoluted process, the bastion of freedom and choice has developed a process for combating our modern destroyers: Tobacco and obesity. We all know how dangerous tobacco is, and we're wiping it out by charging $5.20 per pack and a lot of other activity principally begun by the legal system. Overweight and obese individuals (Body Mass Index of 25 and above) are at increased risk for physical ailments such as

- High blood pressure, hypertension
- High blood cholesterol, dyslipidemia
- Type 2 (non-insulin dependent) Diabetes
- Insulin resistance, glucose intolerance
- Hyperinsulinemia
- Coronary heart disease
- Angina pectoris
- Congestive heart failure
- Stroke
- Gallstones
- Cholescystitis and cholelithiasis
- Gout
- Osteoarthritis
- Obstructive sleep apnea and respiratory problems
- Some types of cancer (such as endometrial, breast, prostate, and colon)
- Complications of pregnancy
- Poor female reproductive health (such as menstrual irregularities, infertility, irregular ovulation)
- Bladder control problems (such as stress incontinence)
- Uric acid nephrolithiasis
- Psychological disorders (such as depression, eating disorders, distorted body image, and low self esteem).

So, what do we do about it? We sue McDonald's, Burger King, The Colonel, and everyone who dares to produce a french-fry. (which makes up much of the vegetable matter consumed in the U.S.)

And we'll have legions of lawyers battling fast food purveyors with their advertising clout. In a recent article, the American Restaurant Association said: "All of this finger-pointing assumes that Americans have no self-control over what (or how much food) they put into their mouths. Is it true then that people today cannot control the foods they eat? Is it the responsibility of restaurants to compensate for this loss of control by limiting food choices for their customers by banning large portions?"

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' report "Healthy People 2010" states "the development of obesity is a complex result of a variety of social, behavioral, cultural, environmental, physiological and genetic factors."

Let's face it, prepared food tastes good, and it's relatively cheap. If we didn't have it, we would have to prepare food for ourselves; we might prepare less, and maybe healthier. At least the stuff I prepare seldom tastes as good as what I get when we go out, and I therefore eat less. A form of self restraint?

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

Each day we die a little more;
Stale custom takes its toll:
It is the Unexpected Thing
That brings life to the soul.
— Harry Kemp

I was reading an interview with one of my favorite writer/naturalists, Robert Finch, in which he talked about seeing "deliberately." Such a gift, he said, does not just happen, but is something that is acquired over time, with practice, with deliberateness if you will.

After years of accidental encounters with nature and hours thumbing through field guides in the hopes of making identifications, I'm beginning to understand the developmental process Mr. Finch speaks about. Like intimacy or conversation, developing an "eye" is a learned behavior. As I read Mr. Finch's words I can't help but be reminded of one of my favorite baseball quotes. In his book, "Ball Four," Jim Bouton noted that "You spend a good piece of your life gripping a baseball and in the end it turns out that it was the other way around all the time." It seems to be that way with nature, too. One day you realize that you can't not be looking, can't not be fascinated. The more you discover, the more you want and need to discover. Nature's delicate, beautiful, mysterious moments have you utterly in their grip.

And the moments are everywhere, little moments that enrich a day, that bring life to the soul. I've been spellbound this summer looking into the mesmerizing golden eyes of the great horned owls at the New England Wildlife Center. Now, there's a creature who sees deliberately. Back in the spring, I had spent an afternoon at World's End observing the great horned owlet who was fast becoming the talk of the town, something of a local celebrity. No fewer than eight people had implored me to get over to World's End to see it for myself. The day of my visit mother owl was across the dirt road, perched high in a pine keeping an eye on things. I waited patiently — watching through binoculars as the owlet watched me and flexed its impressive feathered toes and enormous fanned wings — hoping that mother might swoop over and join her offspring, but she never did.

On my way back to the car, one of the rangers mentioned that a second owlet, who had fallen from the tree, had been taken to the Wildlife Center. Curious to know how it was faring, I drove to the center and was introduced to not one owlet, but four. Their penetrating yellow eyes, set in the front of cat-like faces, watched my every move. They hissed and clacked. Normally secretive and silent, owls, including the great horned, are rarely seen, but here, in Hingham, we have the opportunity to stand face to face, separated only by a wire fence, and experience their mystery.

And the moments are everywhere, little moments that enrich a day, that bring life to the soul.

It has been a summer of interesting bird experiences. All around the yard I've been finding delicate bits of cast-off egg shell balanced atop blades of grass. Red-winged blackbirds, harbingers of spring and common around marshes and swamps have, for the first time, been regular visitors to my feeders. On the other hand, starlings, an introduced species whose aggression and boldness have been detrimental to native species, have always flocked to my feeders. Little did the flock realize that on one seemingly quiet afternoon danger was lurking. Were it not for my cat, I would have missed the dramatic (indeed traumatic) event that was about to unfold. My cat was in his stalking mode and I, curious to see what he had in his sights, quietly approached just in time to see a sharp-shinned hawk glide in and pick up a young starling. Tenacious hunters and fast and maneuverable fliers, sharp-shinned hawks, small woodland hawks measuring less than a foot in length, feed on small birds and often frequent backyard feeders in search of prey.

With the squealing starling in his talons, the hawk lifted off, flew over my lilacs and set down in the middle of Hobart Street where it readjusted its catch before again taking off. I followed the hawk into my neighbor's yard where it again landed and, perhaps distracted by my presence, momentarily loosened its grip on the starling who seized the opportunity and flew away. The hawk retreated to a tree limb, no doubt cursing my interference.

While that small drama was a unique moment in the backyard pageant, the presence of small, circular depressions in the dirt in my flower beds had been a recurring mystery. For weeks, every morning I was finding the dirt mussed and scattered and I assumed that one of the night creatures was, again, foraging for my gladiola bulbs. Last year, all of my bulbs had been unearthed several times over the course of the summer. That mystery was solved when I discovered that the skunks had been digging for the bone meal. This year's evidence, however, was not so much digging as it was disruption. I would have remained stymied had I not glanced out a side window one morning and spied a flock of house sparrows "splashing" about in the dirt. Turns out that "dirt baths" are the sparrows' way of ridding their feathers of fleas and mites.

It was not too many days later when, going about my business depositing my light bill in the box outside of Town Hall, I spotted a sprightly bird, with plover-like features and an insistent call, on the front lawn. I approached, hoping to get a better view, only to frighten it away, up and over Town Hall toward Cronin Field. Still, I saw enough to be able to identify it by its black breast bands and distinctive orange rump as a killdeer.

Not an uncommon bird, though its classification as an "upland shorebird" seems to be a contradiction in terms, this plover of fields and pastureland nests in a shallow depression on rocky or sandy ground and aggressively defends its nest by displaying its orange rump and dragging a wing as it flutters along the ground, usually making enough commotion to lead predators away from the nest.

Not long after my own sighting, one of the area newspapers reported that a killdeer had built a nest and laid a brood of four eggs in the parking lot of a Scituate golf course. Curious onlookers were being kept at bay by flapping wings, a thrusting beak and agitated calls. Not a week later, I had the pleasure of spotting still another killdeer on the playing fields on Beal Street and I got to wondering if I might finally be learning to see, getting the hang of seeing "deliberately."

Swift housing bill veto is underrated

STATHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Analysis and recap of the week in state government ending Aug. 9

Lame duck or not, Jane Swift wielded more power last week than she ever has as governor — and probably ever will again.

The most misunderstood fact about the Legislature outside the building (other than that they're not all useless or crooks) is that the House and Senate didn't go out of session. They'll meet twice a week and pass scores of less-controversial items, with disputes settled off the public stage, until the session truly ends on Dec. 31. But formal sessions, when debate and roll call votes are allowed, did end on July 31st.

With the House and Senate out of formal sessions, Swift was free to veto any of the 86 bills that sat on her desk as the week began. Since roll call votes can only be held in formal sessions, she was free to kill anything she didn't like simply by declaring: "I veto this." Unlike the situation with budget vetoes two weeks ago, there is no opportunity for the Legislature to restore legislation she rejects. She enjoys this extraordinary power until the end of December — but this week is the last time she'll wield it over bills passed on roll calls after debate.

As the week ended, speculation remained rampant over what she'd do about arguably the most significant piece of work of the 182nd Legislature — legislation designed to create affordable housing in communities where town leaders don't want it.

For a long period of time this year, it appeared no compromise could be reached on legislation designed to mollify suburban representatives, who've seen more and more new developments approved in their communities without local consent, under a law designed to prevent towns from blocking new affordable housing.

But just as the session ended, the House and Senate passed a bill saying that communities with too few affordable units in their borders wouldn't have to accept developments they didn't like — if they could prove they had made their own plans to increase the affordable housing stock by half a percent in any given year.

The acting governor was said to believe the half a percent mark was too low — that developers would stop trying to build affordable units because they'd have to wait too long for approval of their projects. If she vetoed the bill, she would be preserving a status quo abhorrent to many suburban representatives, and the whole battle will have to be repeated next session. Most housing advocates wanted her to sign the legislation.

But it could be the last decision she makes with a really long-term, significant impact. It might be the most important of her career.

Nevertheless She vetoed the measure (Saturday) although that won't get the attention her babies or budget cuts or mode of transportation did. But it could be the last decision she makes with a really long-term, significant impact. It might be the most important of her career.

Attention will now turn in earnest to the question of who will replace her, what the people hoping to succeed her are like, and what they would try to do with the power she held for such a short time. Swift's status as CEO of the state made a lot of news this week. She announced no vetoes, but signed dozens of measures into law.

- The acting governor said a bill passed two weeks ago by the House and Senate will move immigrants out of bilingual classes more quickly while giving them the English skills they need to succeed. The law limits students to three years in bilingual ed - unlike the one year limit in an anti-bilingual question now heading for the ballot. The bill Swift signed sets up new mechanisms to measure student performance in bilingual classes, and gives school districts options for choosing educational models, but sponsors of the ballot question said the new law preserves too much of the status quo.
- Besides the bilingual bill, Swift put her signature on close to 40 other laws, many of them routine land takings or approving actions at the local level, but some granting broader rights, such as a measure allowing farmers to sell their home-brewed beer on Sunday and a new law allowing firefighters to monitor 911 calls.
- The world-famous rehabilitation hospital in Boston will receive the right to buy the site of the old Nashua Street Registry building, acting Gov. Swift and Boston Mayor Thomas Menino announced Wednesday. The hospital had been pursuing legal action versus the state along several avenues, all related to hospital land takings by the state for the Big Dig. Hospital officials see the Nashua St. site as critical to Spaulding's strategy to grow while remaining in Boston.
- Mass. Insight and the New England Economic Project reported a 17 point drop in consumer confidence in July. While respondents are optimistic about future growth, they said they don't feel good about current economic conditions - and analysts said that pessimism could lead to cautious spending and contribute to a "double dip" recession.
- The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has found the Mass. Port Authority and 10 bus companies guilty of violating federal clean air rules banning busses from idling more than five minutes. The companies and authority face fines of up $27,500 for allowing busses to idle at South Station and Logan Airport. MassPort was cited for a natural gas bus, but it's diesel fumes that do the real damage, EPA says - they've been linked to asthma in the inner city.
- The activist groups who think the House Speaker sabotaged the Clean Elections system and runs the House too autocratically announced a campaign in 18 legislative districts in which they'll try to put non-binding questions on the ballot advising reps to vote to remove the speaker next January. Finneran had no comment.

Wordsmiths?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I had a dentist in New York who had an office off Park Avenue and bills to match. He never put a filling in my teeth, he did a "restoration." I didn't feel pain while he worked in my mouth, I experienced "discomfort." Neither word made me feel any better.

I don't remember the dentists name but I wish I did because the syndrome seems to have spread across the country where otherwise rational people have succumbed to the practice of demonizing words that have been part of the language since it was invented.

Just the other day I heard about some folks who were out protesting the use of the word "adopt," as in "adopt-a-highway," the practice by some organizations of picking up the trash and mowing the grass on certain sections of state highway.

I heard about some folks who were out protesting the use of the word "adopt," as in "adopt-a-highway."

They'd rather see the word reserved for the adoption of orphans and not plastered on signs which offend them at intervals along the presumably well-kept roads. "When I see the current signs, I feel odd and strange that highways get more attention than real children who are waiting to get adopted," according to a letter from a teen-ager received by Keith Chaney, associate commissioner of the Mass Highway Department. I learned of this assault on Webster's dictionary about the same time I received word that Oddsocks Productions of London has dropped the classic "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," from its repertoire and has substituted "The Bellringer of Notre Dame."

"We have not changed the novel in any way," producer Elli Mackenzie is quoted as telling the Daily Mirror of London reassuringly, "we simply felt changing the title would cause less offense to people."

The novel, incidentally, has been "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" since Victor Hugo wrote it in 1831 and nobody noticed the offense. The City Council in Los Angeles, where the good folks "adopt" dogs from the local pound, has joined the popular trend and is considering "adopting" the terms "pet guardians" in place of "pet owners" for those who have animals in their care or custody, whichever name fits. (Note the clever use of the proscribed word.)

"It (the change) will raise consciousness about the relationship on the part of people who are inclined to view their animal companions as disposable goods," said Elliot Katz, director of the group called "In Defense of Animals." "If a pet can have a guardian, then the guardian can be removed for not doing his job, and any other guardian can be appointed to speak for the pet," said Richard Clapp, associate dean of the law school at nearby Pepperdine University.

So you can see what we're letting ourselves in for. "When I use a word," said Humpty Dumpty to Alice, "it means just what I choose it to mean, neither more nor less." "The question is," Alice replied, "whether you can make words mean so many different things." "The question is," said Humpty Dumpty, "which is to be master, that's all."

POLITICAL NOTES

Palmer campaigns at Heritage Days

Nathaniel Palmer, running for state representative for Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, and North Scituate, spent the weekend meeting with families at Scituate Heritage Days, joining Plymouth County District Attorney Tim Cruz as the only local candidates with former participation in the event.

The Palmer campaign dedicated the entire weekend to the event, where the Nathaniel Palmer and his family setup a voter information booth to provide assistance on the impact of the recent redistricting involving Scituate, whereby Precinct 3 joins with the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull to form the 3rd Plymouth District.

Among those issues Palmer found are concern over the recent tax hike, the need for more mitigation resources for the expansion of the Greenbush line, as well as the pending 'Walden Woods' project on the Stenbeck property and the implications this has for local zoning issues.

Supporters of Palmer will host a coffee at Bancroft Hall in the former Lightkeeper's Residence on Cohasset Harbor, where honored guests will include former State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray. The event will be held on Aug. 21 beginning at 7:30pm in the evening. For more information contact: Nancy O'Toole at 781-383-1547, Lucia Woods at 781-383-0152 or Barbara Dillon at 781-383-0025.

LeClair opens offices

All residents are invited to attend the opening receptions, meet Ted LeClair and learn more about the campaign.

"The new offices in Weymouth and Cohasset will provide much needed space for our volunteer operations and help launch us into an exciting new phase of this campaign," said LeClair. "As I talk to more and more residents throughout Plymouth-Norfolk I'm finding a consensus that we can do more for our District and I believe my experience demonstrates I am the best person for the job."

Cohasset's Bruce Herzfelder likes the heat

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

August is a particularly hot and steamy month in Boston, but candidate for state treasurer and Cohasset resident Bruce Herzfelder doesn't seem to care.

"Do you mind sitting outside?" he asks, as he orders a quick bite to eat from Seasonal Table, the café across the street from his headquarters on Massachusetts Avenue.

Leaving the air conditioned tables inside for the sweltering sidewalk outside seems a bit ludicrous, but then again, so does leaving a successful career in the private sector for the ruthless world of Massachusetts politics.

"I've always been thinking about it," said Herzfelder, 42, seemingly oblivious to the heat in a dark blue business suit "Ever since I graduated from college I have been keeping one eye on government and politics. I was a clerk for a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals, and that kind of rekindled my interest in policy questions, but that was 12 years ago."

It wasn't until last September, though, that this Harvard-educated entrepreneur with an MBA and law degree from the University of Chicago, decided to turn keen interest into something deeper.

"One factor that tipped me in my decision was the attack on the World Trade Center," said Herzfelder. "When I had worked in New York, I had worked two blocks away from the World Trade Center. It affected everybody profoundly and the way it affected me was to make me go ahead and do what I was thinking of doing. It made me take action."

And so, the former Chicago banker, Wall Street lawyer, and entrepreneur behind Hingham-based VetCor, a network of 40 animal hospitals in New England, North Carolina and Chicago, took the logical next step – the state treasury.

"A lot of people come up to me as I go around the Commonwealth and say that they really like the fact that I am running for office as a citizen," said Herzfelder, turning his lack of political experience into an asset. "We sometimes call it the Iron Triangle. The Iron Triangle of Massachusetts politics is career politicians, career lobbyists and career bureaucrats. I'm the only one in the major parties who's not in those categories."

Herzfelder, a Republican, believes that the state treasurer's post is not really a political position, it's a financial one, pointing out that in eight states, the position is appointed.

"I think it is really good," said Herzfelder, commenting on his outsider status. "Especially for the office of the treasury, where it's really largely a technical function. It's a financial position and the experience that counts for that position is financial experience."

That is not to say that Herzfelder is not embracing the political process.

"It's a privilege to run for office," said Herzfelder. "I like to live in a country where I can run for office, because I've lived in several countries where that was not possible for the average citizen, or in fact for anybody."

Herzfelder was born in Bogota, Columbia and spent the lion's share of his childhood following his father's work around the globe.

"When my father got out of the Navy, he went to work for Sears," said Herzfelder. "His first job was on a packing line, putting shirts into boxes. He eventually became a product buyer and that job took us around the world to different places. We lived in Bogota, Columbia and Madrid, Spain. The experience of living in a poor dictatorship really makes you appreciate what we have here."

For the last 12 years, he has made his home in Cohasset, with his wife Ellen, four-year-old daughter Julia and one-and-a-half-year-old son Desmond.

"I like to live in a country where I can run for office, because I've lived in several countries where that was not possible for the average citizen, or in fact for anybody."
— Bruce Herzfelder

"I've lived in Cohasset for 12 years, that's the longest I've ever lived in any place," he said. "So, Cohasset is sort of my home. And it is a beautiful home, its a great place to settle."

Cohasset would remain as his home base were he to win the state treasurer's job he views as his opportunity to give back.

"I'm very interested in making a difference," he said. "I see it kind of as an opportunity for me to give something, to make a contribution in a big way to a number of folks."

That contribution could go beyond just time in service to the commonwealth. Herzfelder must vie with fellow Republican Dan Grabauskas in the Sept. 17 state primary for the right to face off with the Democratic nominee. If he wins the primary and were to win election in November, Herzfelder would attempt to institute a business-style approach to running the Treasury.

"It's the essence of my campaign and my candidacy," he said. "One of the objectives I have for the treasurer's office is to professionalize the office. It has good people working for it, but it just hasn't had anybody in charge who has been a financial person. Instead it has had political people in charge and political people tend to politically minded people to work for them."

That would change under Herzfelder's guidance.

"What I would like to do is open it up and make the treasury open to people who have financial experience and want to make a contribution in government," said Herzfelder. "A lot of people come up to me and say 'I like what you are doing. I would be interested in doing that myself, but how would I even do it, I'm not connected. I don't know anybody,' and that is what I want to do, open it up to people who aren't connected."

Katie Cahill of Citizens for Bruce Herzfelder was won over by Herzfelder's personality and ideals.

"When you find out that Bruce is just a nice guy, its a much easier sell for those of us working on (the campaign)," said Cahill, joining the interview after a demographics meeting ended across the street. "That's really what got me involved working on it. Bruce and the team that he has put together. It makes a big difference who you pull in and Bruce's philosophy has been to put together people that are very energetic, intelligent and personable people, instead of just pulling from the same old crowd of insiders and campaign workers."

The business approach Herzfelder has taken, even during the campaign, is refreshing to Cahill.

"He went out an found some really fresh people who are really energetic about the campaign and really wanted to win, but wanted to do it in way that was positive," said Cahill. "And I think that that really affects our campaign in a really nice way."

Despite the business approach, Herzfelder's willingness to participate in traditional political activities such as parade walking has earned him the nickname 'Grassroots Bruce' around the campaign headquarters.

Cahill was not so sure Herzfelder would be impressed after his first parade experience – a seven-hour, seven-mile, two-town ordeal on the Fourth of July in 100-degree heat.

"At the end of the parade, I'm thinking to myself, 'Oh my gosh,'' Bruce is going to lay into me, how could you make me do this, it's so exhausting," said Cahill. "So I'm all ready and he says 'Katie, I have to tell you,' and I'm gearing myself up for it, and I'm thinking of my rebuttals about how important parades are in terms of visibility and he goes 'This was a great day, I really feel like I got to see a lot of people, that I got my message out to a lot of people, that I shook a lot of hands. These parades are a great use of our time and we should do more of them.'"

Cahill was flabbergasted.

"Let's be honest," said Cahill. "Your average person thinks, 'Gosh, would I prefer to spend my afternoon marching in a parade or hanging out at the pool with my family?'"

Herzfelder had a simple explanation.

"I like parades," he said.

By this time it is clear. It is not the parades he likes, or even the politics for that matter. It's just the heat.

Town Manager Mark Haddad passes five-year mark

move on, a citizens' group seized the opportunity to push for a profound change in town government. Soon backed by the Government Structure Committee, the group sought to replace the existing "weak" town administrator position, with no authority to hire and fire — to a Town Manager with that power and more.

The town needed professional leadership; someone to run the day-to-day matters so selectmen could concentrate on policy, was the battle cry that resonated with a majority at Town Meeting that spring. The Cohasset Town Manager Act was later approved by the state Legislature.

Enter Haddad, who at 6-feet, 3-inches and 215 pounds can be an imposing figure and has not surprisingly ruffled more than a few feathers along the way. His voice is loud and he doesn't tread lightly, both figuratively and literally.

One of two finalists for the job, which promised an annual salary of about $60,000 and attracted some 40 applicants at the time, the youthful Haddad sold selectmen on his budgetary expertise. They liked his desire to face challenges head on.

"I will always give 150 percent," Haddad told the board in his interview.

And now, some 60 months later, Haddad has lived up to his word. While he has his critics, no one would accuse him of slacking off.

"Some may argue there is too much control and authority in one position," he says. "But that's the way things get done."

The headline in the Cohasset Mariner after Haddad passed the one-year mark that stated, "Haddad looks back on a hectic year" could have been written yesterday. In other words, the pace has not slowed.

When that headline was written in August 1998, the harbor dredging project was set to begin, plans were in the works to consolidate the Department of Public Works; sewer issues loomed including a Little Harbor study; the facilities audit spelled out what needed to be done to town buildings; and Haddad had just appointed a new library director. And yes, Haddad began to work cooperatively with the School Committee on its budget, rather than continue the testy budgetary relationship between the schools and municipal side of town government that had become the norm in past years.

Then there was the Sewer Commissioners' decision to sue the town over who has the authority to award contracts — a sign the young Town Manager Act had some growing pains.

In the ensuing years major changes were in the works that would include bringing paramedics on board the fire department; creating the position of Town Finance Director; hiring a new police chief and a new DPW chief; working with selectmen to ink a Greenbush mitigation agreement with the MBTA; overseeing $42 million in school building projects and embarking on the village revitalization project — all while the town extended its sewers and upgraded its water distribution system.

"There's been a lot in the past five years," notes Haddad, who also welcomed another son into his young family during that time.

"The town has changed tremendously — for the better," he quickly adds. "The infrastructure is solid for the next 50 years thanks to the taxpayers who stepped up to the plate and opened their pocketbooks."

"Some may argue there is too much control and authority in one position. But that's the way things get done."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Successful overrides for the operating budget, sewers, and school buildings helped boost the town's bond rating under Haddad's watch, saving upwards of $750,000 as the town is poised to borrow about $40 million for the Deer Hill and middle-high school building projects.

Haddad has a big personality who likes to cut to the chase — some may find his quickness intimidating or even rude.

"I'm kind of loud and I'm kind of a big person," he says. "But I like to think of myself as very approachable."

In fact his "open-door policy" included several interruptions during the hour-long interview, including visits from the police chief and building inspector, and young Philip Haddad, 5-1/2, who isn't the least bit intimidated by his Dad.

"I'm an honest person," Haddad reflects. "I'm forthright and have a good sense of humor, but I'm sometimes loud and sometimes quick and I do get a little passionate at times.

"I do raise my voice when I get passionate about something."

The combination of power and personality may have led to a clash last summer that Haddad describes as the low point of his time in Cohasset. Haddad and Planning Board member Peter Pratt got into a heated verbal altercation over a meeting Haddad had called with some department heads, board chairmen and AvalonBay development officials. The aftermath of the argument ended up in the selectmen's lap. Selectmen, who ultimately backed Haddad, hired an independent investigator to examine cross-complaints of harassment and verbal abuse between Haddad and Pratt.

"We did not find any cause where the incident was anything beyond a disagreement between individuals," said then Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed at the time.

Still, despite the support of the Board of Selectmen, it was an ugly time. The dispute was aired publicly and provided fodder for newspaper stories.

"If I could change anything, I would change the manner in which I dealt with Mr. Pratt that day," Haddad says.

The incident gave him pause and may have played a role in Haddad's plans to consider moving on to the town administrator post in Dedham earlier this year, albeit moving to a town of 23,000 would seem to be the next logical step. But selectmen each approached Haddad individually asking him to stay. They renegotiated his contract and also agreed to boost his salary from $90,000 to $102,000.

"It was an opportunity to go to a bigger town, but when push came to shove," Haddad says about the Dedham move that offered up to $110,000.

Mark Haddad

"There's so many things to finish here, it would have been hard for me to walk away.

"So I reassessed — if the board still wants me, I'll still be here," says Haddad, who lives in Scituate with his wife Angela and two sons.

The challenges ahead for Haddad are formidable.

Just for openers, he is looking forward to working with Cashman Balfour Beatty on all aspects of train construction; helping to facilitate developing senior housing in town; dealing with the proposed AvalonBay apartment complex and affordable housing issues related to Chapter 40B; working with the Waterfield Group on the downtown revitalization; and figuring out how best to handle delayed reimbursement on the school building assistance from the state so Cohasset taxpayers aren't saddled with a huge jump in property taxes. Whew.

But Haddad, who has managed to keep selectmen's meetings to an average of two hours thanks to good communication and a weekly report, isn't worried about the workload. He relishes the excitement of change and the satisfaction of seeing jobs through to completion.

Haddad says the Town Manager form of government has brought more efficiency to Cohasset whose annual operating budget including the schools is $27 million. He notes with a Town Manager, selectmen are freed up to set policy.

"They still control the vision of the town," he says. "But it's my job to carry out that vision."

Shocker

Hill, Rose lead underdog Cohasset past Scituate in District title game

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Yeah, this should take the edge off things.

Mark DeGiacomo knew going into Thursday's final game of this summer season that there would be accompanying feelings of melancholy when it was all over, win or lose — hardly surprising, considering he's been coaching this core group of 12-year old all-stars the last six years.

"They're moving to the big diamond next year, and things are never really the same after that," assessed the Cohasset Little League coach. "Most of the kids will keep playing, but there's just something special about Little League."

We're guessing, of course, that winning was preferable, and the fact that this win secured a district championship cushioned the blow quite a bit more. And the fact that the win came over the heavily favored and unbeaten Scituate team that had lambasted Cohasset in three previous meetings this summer at various tourneys? Well, if it had to end, that had to be just about the optimal way to do it.

"I'm extremely proud of this group of kids, and extremely happy for them too," said DeGiacomo, following the 4-2 win at Scituate's Greenbush Field Thursday night. "This has been a great group of kids to work with, and a great group of parents who've been very supportive.

Bay State Games funding slashed

Local coaches express hope cuts won't take heavy toll

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Massachusetts Amateur Sports Foundation (M.A.S.F.), the organization that runs the Bay State Summer and Winter Games, will not receive state funding this year after nine consecutive years of support from Beacon Hill. Acting Governor Jane Swift vetoed funding that was allocated to the Games, cutting the non-profit foundation's total operating budget by one third.

"We are disappointed, of course, but we will do everything in our power to find a way to ensure that the Games go on; it certainly won't be easy," said Kevin Cummings, Executive Director of the Bay State Games, who has been with the MASF for the past 18 years, in a press release issued last week by the M.A.S.F..

In addition to the state allocation of $200,000, the M.A.S.F. raises funds from athlete entry fees, corporate sponsorship and donations.

"I just hope whatever the cuts are they're unilateral," said Jason Tassinari, who has coached the Coastal entry in the scholastic boys soccer tourney the past two years. "It would be

Eight Cohasset cyclists complete Pan-Mass Challenge

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Last Saturday and Sunday, a few thousand men and women across Massachusetts banded together in hopes of improving the lives of millions.

The Pan-Massachusetts Challenge, a weekend long bike race held annually, has been run from Sturbridge to Provincetown since 1980. In that span, the event has raised almost $70 million dollars for cancer research.

In its 22nd year, the PMC is the nation's top bicycle fundraiser. This weekend, more than 3,600 riders raised an estimated $15 million for the Jimmy Fund, which supports Cancer care and research at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. It is the Jimmy Fund's largest fundraiser, with 92 cents of each dollar raised going directly to the Jimmy Fund.

Twelve Cohasset residents geared up to attempt the grueling 192-mile trek, a scenic course that covers 44 Massachusetts towns. Although several Cohasset bikers had to withdraw from the Challenge for various scheduling conflicts and injuries, the eight who did participate in one or two day rides were James Clark, Jeffrey

All-Scholastic boys lacrosse team

Five Cohasset laxmen named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed here as "Honorable Mentions" received serous consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

After consulting with area coaches, however, we feel secure that we chose the top 17 laxmen in Marinerland for this honor.

Curt Kahn – Junior Attack – Cohasset

Curt Kahn

Emerged as main offensive threat for Skippers team hit hard by graduation and injury, helping them to a 12-7 record and a quarterfinals post-season run…a lefty with an extremely accurate shot from all angles…topped the team in goals scored (51) and assists (32)…Pilgrim Conference-second team all-star… Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic Honorable Mention…was a Top Gun Player of the week and Mariner Star of the week this spring…top single game output this year was six goals versus Marshfield, all of these coming after he'd been knocked unconscious momentarily by a check early in the game…scored five goals in second round tourney win over Norwell…Boston Globe All-Scholastic Honorable Mention…member of Bay State Games lacrosse team that won Gold in 2001 and '02…also plays varsity soccer and indoor lacrosse in the winter…National Honor Society…brother Eli played lacrosse at Harvard…sister Jaclyn plays soccer ai Swathmore College… has talked to a few college coaches, but is focussing on his academic plans above his athletic aspirations…Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt: "He's not the biggest kid around, but he showed a lot of toughness at times this year. He turned into a gamer for us who stepped up in big games. He's worked really hard on his shooting and his overall game."

Eric Libby – Senior Midfield – Cohasset

Eric Libby

A sensational all-around athlete who emerged as the key figure in the middle of the field for this year's Skippers team that finished 12-7 and advanced to the state Div. 2 quarterfinals…totaled 26 goals and 28 assists while playing outstanding two-way lacrosse…the only Cohasset player named a first team Pilgrim Conference All-Star…played on last summer's gold medal winning Bay State Games team…played much of the season with a nagging back injury, yet finished among the team leaders in minutes played…was also an excellent high school hockey player for Cohasset High who earned South Shore League All-Star and Mariner All-Scholastic honors this winter…a standout in soccer for CHS as a junior, he moved to football this fall, and won a starting job in the defensive backfield with the SSL champion team…attended Xaverian Brothers High School his freshman and sophomore years…will attend St. Michaels University in Brighton, Vermont, this fall, where he will play lacrosse…undecided on his major… Cohasset lacrosse coach Kevin Orcutt: "Eric gave us a lot of what Ronan (Buick, former team star now playing lacrosse at Providence College) gave us last year. He a dominant athlete, but he was a lot more than that for us. You could tell his back was bothering him at times this year, but he never complained and just played through it. He was so vital to us in the middle of the field, controlling everything. As a team, we were a little bit up and down this year, but he was a rock. He was someone we could always count on."

Matt Davis – Midfield Junior – Cohasset

Matt Davis

Another exceptional athlete who seems to have found a nice fit with lacrosse… finished fourth on the Skippers in scoring (24 goals, 28 assists), and set up many more without getting his name in the scorebook, according to coach Kevin Orcutt…a skilled player with a very good two-way game… Pilgrim Confer-ence second team all-star… played on this summer's gold medal winning south team at the Bay State Games… was recently invited to play at the prestigious Top 205 Tourney in Mary-land… also a very good hockey player, earning South Shore League all-star and Mariner All-Scholastic acknowledgment this winter…will play football for C.H.S. this fall…would like to play college lacrosse…has already been contacted by several college lacrosse coaches…Cohasset lacrosse coach Kevin Orcutt: "Matt is smooth and smart, and he's got great skills. Nick Spirito — Defense
Junior— Cohasset

Nick Spirito

"A player who lives, sleeps and eats lacrosse," according to Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt... plays lacrosse year round... plays in winter and fall indoor leagues at the Canton Sports Complex and for Top Gun...has played in several elite tourneys in the summer...was a defender the last two years for the gold medal winning south team at the Bay State Games...was recently invited to play at the prestigious Top 205 Tourney in Maryland...Pilgrim Conference All-Star team Honorable Mention...an extremely tough, yet clean player...won Pilgrim Conference "Sportsmanship Award" this spring... played soccer for Cohasset High into his junior year, but will play football this year...would like to play college lacrosse and has already talked to a few college coaches (Providence, UMass-Dartmouth)...Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt: "He gets a little overshadowed sometimes by flashier players, but Nick is a legitimate top four defenseman in the Pilgrim Conference, in my mind. He plays so hard and does so many of the little things a coach loves to see. He's also a great leader. He was a no-brainer choice as a captain for next year."

Kyle Weber - Senior
Goalie – Cohasset

Kyle Weber

Two time Pilgrim Conference all-star, earning first team honors last year and second team this year... posted an eye-popping .720 save ratio as a junior, and .654 this season playing in front of a younger defense...backstopped the Skippers to the state championship game as a junior and state semifinals this spring...two time Mariner All-Scholastic selection...two time Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...undersized for a goalie, Weber more than compensates with superior athleticism, reflexes and instincts...also considered one of the best passing goalies in the state...once a soccer and basketball standout, Weber opted to concentrate year-round on lacrosse after his sophomore year...excellent student...was recruited by several college lacrosse coaches, but opted to attend Northwestern University, which has no lacrosse program...intends to major in either Psychology or Sociology...plans to play club lacrosse... Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt: "Kyle was our spark in back. Not a lot of goalies can inspire their teammates like he could. He'd make a great save, and then he'd really get us going with the way he handled the ball afterwards and then worked it up field. He could have been an All-Scholastic at any position, with a long stick or short stick."

Greg Sowyrda - Senior
(Capt.)
Defense - Hingham

No question here...A two-time All-American defenseman, Sowyrda helped Hingham capture it's second-straight Div. 2 state championship this season...A virtual brick wall on the right side of the backfield for Hingham (17-5) and was always put on the opponent's best offensive player... He held Ipswich's top goal scorer to just one score in the state title game...In addition to his defensive efforts, Sowyrda also contributed some offense this season, pitching in seven points on one goal and six assists...Was named The Boston Globe Div. 2 Player of the Year this season for his efforts...A two-time lax All-Scholastic, Sowyrda is also a two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star...Also a talented basketball player, Sowyrda made our hoop squad for the past two seasons and was voted a Patriot League All-star...Sowyrda plans to attend Deerfield Academy, where he will continue his lacrosse career. Hingham coach John Todd: "He's probably the best defenseman in the state and is certainly one of the better one's we've had at Hingham. His size and his speed really lends to his game. He can shut down any attackman and gets the ball up field real well. He's received a lot of due recognition from other coaches and it's been very nice to have a player like that here."

Greg Sowyrda

Connor Fitzgerald -
Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Hingham

Easily one of the leading attackers in the area, Fitzgerald led his talented Hingham team in scoring, racking up 70 points on 29 goals and 41 assists...Fitzgerald scored 75 points in his junior season and had more than 200 for his career...The senior received All-America honors this season for his efforts in helping the Harbormen (17-5) capture their second Div. 2 state title in as many years...A two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star, Fitzgerald accomplished a thrill of a lifetime, scoring the game-winning goal in Hingham's 10-9 OT win over top-seeded Winchester in the Div. 2 semifinals...He also had two assists in the state title game...Strong, quick, and aggressive, Fitzgerald continually pierced through opponent's offenses with the greatest of ease...A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in lacrosse, Fitzgerald also captained the soccer team in the fall and was voted a Patriot League All-star...Fitzgerald plans to attend Bowdin College, where he will continue his lacrosse career. Hingham coach John Todd: "Connor had an unbelievable season and really blossomed as a player. He drew some of the better defensemen in the area yet his ability to continue to score was never greatly effected by that. He really sparked the offense and without him, we may not have gotten by Winchester."

Pat Lenhart - Senior (Capt.)
Attack/Midfield - Hingham

Pat Lenhart

Another talented attacker and four-year starter on the Hingham squad, Lenhart racked several crucial points this season... Lenhart finished with 191 for his career...A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Lenhart graciously agreed to make the switch from attack to midfield halfway through the season, to better balance the offense...His efforts on both fronts helped Hingham capture it's second-straight Div. 2 state title, scoring a goal in the title game win at Ipswich...A tremendous athlete, Lenhart's toughness, quickness, and tenacity made him an undeniable force on the field this season for the Harbormen (17-5)...A two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star, Lenhart plans to attend Bucknell University, where he will continue his lacrosse career. Hingham coach John Todd: "Because of his great athletic ability, the switch from attack to midfield seemed very natural for him. He really balanced out his duties very well. He learned what it took to be a good midfielder, while remaining an unbelievable attackman. He was really the key ingredient to a lot of our success this season."

Hardy Allen - Senior
Midfield - Hingham

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic midfielder, Allen had yet another strong season for the Harbormen (17-5)...A junior transfer out of Thayer Academy last season, Allen's undeniable impact in the midfield helped Hingham win a Div. 2 state title...His consistency at the position helped the Harbormen repeat that title again this season...A two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star, Allen was as valuable offensively as he was defensively, playing on both ends of the midfield for Hingham...Allen's offensive efforts were seen in the team's state title win over Ipswich this season, in which he found the back of the net two times...He also scored two crucial goals in Hingham's 10-9 OT win over Winchester in the state semifinals...It was his aggressiveness and strength in the defensive midfield, however, that made the biggest impact on the Harbormen squad...Allen plans to attend college, and may continue his lacrosse career. Hingham coach John Todd: "He's one of the toughest, hard working kids I've ever coached. He brings this blue collar aspect to the midfield, in that every ground ball is his. Whether its delivering a big hit or setting up a goal, Hardy was always in the mix. He really led by example."

Greg Paul - Junior
Midfield - Hingham

Wasn't at all intimidated by Hingham's fully seniorized frontline and proved his worth by scoring several crucial points for the Harbormen this season...A talented middie, Paul's impressive speed added a spark to the offensive midfield this year and helped the Harbormen (17-5) capture their second-straight Div. 2 state title...Paul had three helpers in the title game at Ipswich, while adding a goal himself...Paul had a busy summer playing lacrosse for the two-time gold medalist Southeast team in this year's Bay State Summer Games...Paul was the leading scorer (14 points on six goals, eight assists) in the BSG lax tourney...This is Paul's first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team...A Pilgrim League All-star, the midfielder will return to the Hingham lacrosse squad and will most-likely lead the team's offense, as several key players will be lost to graduation. Hingham coach John Todd: "He's probably the fastest midfielder we've ever had. His first step around a defender allows him to excel. How do you stop speed? You don't. He's got an incredibly quick shot and after a good tournament last year, knew that we'd be looking for him to score goals this season. He's a great team player."

Shea Coakley - Junior
Midfield - Marshfield

While the Rams struggled a bit this season, Coakley's performance on offense this season is noteworthy...With graduation losses of several key attackmen, Coakley was forced to adjust to a new role after spending two seasons at midfield, while his numbers weren't particularly high, his presence on the frontline and in the midfield was undeniable...Coakley had a busy summer this year, competing for the Southeast lax team in the Bay State Summer Games and aided in the team winning its second-straight gold...In the tourney, Coakley scored a goal in the title game, as well as a hat-trick in a 17-6 win over Metro...Coakley is making his first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team...He will return as a senior to the Marshfield roster next season. Marshfield coach Robbie Robertson: "We moved Shea around this year from midfield to attack. At midfield, he played well on defense, scooped balls, and distributed the ball well."

Nate Hammond - Junior
Goalie - Hingham

A first-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Hammond made quite an impact between the pipes for Hingham (17-5) as the team's two-year starting goalie...His confidence in goal shined through in many crucial games this season, which helped lead the Harbormen to their second-straight Div. 2 state title...Hammond made several key stops in the team's 10-9 OT win over top-seeded Winchester in the state semifinals...Was equally impressive in the team's 13-6 win over Ipswich in the title game...The junior thrived in big games during the regular season, particularly against Lincoln-Sudbury and their first meeting with Winchester... Hammond kept busy this summer playing lacrosse for the Southeast team in the Bay State Summer Games...The sophomore combined with fellow All-Scholastic Todd Faiella to stop 96 of the 133 shots they saw in goal for an impressive .722 goals against average, leading the team to a second-straight gold medal...Hammond will return to the Harbormen roster next season. Hingham coach John Todd: "Nate just thrives in big games. He loves them. He is fun to have around, but when it's game time, he's very focused and intense. He gets very upset if things aren't going his way and does everything he can to change it. He's matured a great deal since last season and played a very important role in our success."

Todd Faiella - Sophomore
Goalie - Marshfield

Todd Faiella

Just a sophomore, Faiella completed his third season as Marshfield's starting goalie... That's right, Faiella came out of the woodwork as an eighth grader and immediately found himself in the starting goalie position when the senior starter left the team...During that inaugural season, Faiella's hard work in the net helped the Rams reach the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney...Hard work in the off-season is what coach Robbie Robertson attributes Faiella's success to...This summer, Faiella was instrumental in the Southeast team's gold medal win at the Bay State Games...He and fellow All-Scholastic Nate Hammond combined to stop 96 of the 133 shots they saw, good for a .722 goals against average...Faiella is a linebacker on the MHS football team in the fall and last season was awarded the "Player of the Game" award in the annual Thanksgiving Day showdown with Duxbury...Faiella will return to both squads next season. Marshfield coach Robbie Robertson: "It would be hard for me to restrict my enthusiasm for Todd. He's one of the best, if not the best, goalies I've ever coached in my 30 years. He has great hand-eye coordination. All of his skills gel to make him a special player."

Adam Grier – Senior (Capt.)
Midfield – Norwell

Adam Grier

Captained and led the Clippers in scoring each of the past two seasons... totaled 42 goals and nine assists this year, 32 and nine, respectively, in 2001...athleticism and conditioning are his top assets... paced Norwell varsity lacrosse team to best season ever this spring (14-5) ...First team Pilgrim Confer-ence All-Star...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic selection...tallied three points in state coaches all-star game in June...joined on the Mariner All-Scholastic team by junior brother Jason... also played football the last four years, leading the Clippers in interceptions this past fall...will attend Roger Williams this fall, where he was recruited to play lacrosse...Norwell coach Frank Granara: "Adam is a gifted scorer. We knew that going in to this season, but he really stepped up defensively this year as well, and had a very good team concept. It also helped that he was absolutely tireless. You had to drag him off the field."

Jason Grier — Junior
Midfield — Norwell

Jason Grier

Not bad when you make an All-Scholastic team in your second favorite sport... also a Mariner All-Scholastic in soccer...scored 18 goals to go along with a team best 21 assists this season...like big brother and fellow Mariner All-Scholastic Adam, athleticism and conditioning are his top assets...really improved his stick skills this year...second team Pilgrim Conference All-Star...also stood out as a wrestler for Norwell High in his debut season this past winter...notched two goals and six assists for Bay State Games bronze medal winning south soccer team this summer...will likely play college soccer and possibly lacrosse as well...has talked about following brother Adam to Roger Williams College...Norwell coach Frank Granara: "Jason is a real talented player, and someone a lot of teams would love to start their rebuilding around. He's an excellent athlete who has improved dramatically every year he's played lacrosse. We're looking for really big things from him next year."

Bryce Walker — Senior
(Capt.)
Defense — Norwell

Bryce Walker

The central cog in a veteran defensive core that played a huge part in the Clippers best season ever (12-5)...a big, physical player who also possesses outstanding stick skills...played football his freshman though junior year, but concentrated his last year of high school on lacrosse...played indoor lacrosse in the fall and winter, and in various high-level summer camps...played varsity lacrosse all four years, and was a two-year captain...honor roll student...will attend Duke University in North Carolina, but does not figure to play for the nationally ranked Div. 1 powerhouse lacrosse team... does plan to continue playing club lacrosse... is leaning toward majoring in Public Policy... Norwell coach Frank Granara: "Our team defense was very good this year, but Bryce was the one guy who really stood out. He was such a great leader and a clutch performer. He did a great job keeping things under control and then making great clears. Having someone with his stick skills and smarts on defense was so big for us."

Steve McDevitt – Senior
(Capt.)
Midfield – Scituate

Steve McDevitt

McDevitt has been the quarterback of Scituate's offense since his freshman year, and finishes as the school's all-time leading scorer...an extremely quick and shifty player who is extremely evasive in open field...unfortunately, with lacrosse being a relatively new sport at S.H.S., he didn't have a lot of help at the offensive end...had 21 goals and 21 assists this season...two time lacrosse team captain...played on the 2001 gold medal winning south team at the summer Bay State Games...also a Scituate High standout in football and hockey, captaining both of those teams as well as a senior...Sports Editor of school newspaper "The Scituation"...will attend Bridgeton Academy (in Bridgeton, Maine) prep school this year, where he will play hockey and lacrosse in the hopes of drumming up more interest from colleges...has talked to several college lacrosse coaches, including a few from Div. 1 programs, but figured he could use the extra year of seasoning at the Prep level....Scituate coach Chris Weber: "Steve did so much for us. The offense ran through him, and he was a very smooth and polished player. I think there was a tendency for some kids to stand around a little too much and just watch Steve, and that made it real easy for other teams to defend. I kind of felt bad for him at times."

for Cohasset in the District 8 championship showdown, as he went the distance on the mound, and drilled a fourth inning 2-run homer that turned out to be the difference in the game.

The hard throwing Cohasset righty surrendered just four hits and three walks to the high powered Scituate squad, which had averaged better than eight runs per game while compiling an 19-4 summer record, including 8-0 in the District season. In fact, a few weeks prior the Scituatonians had belted three home runs off Hill in a walkover win.

"If you'd told me before this game that Cohasset was going to score four runs, I'd have probably said no problem," noted Scituate head coach Peter Cooney. "But we just never got the bats going, and (Hill) did a great job. That whole team did. They play good, fundamental baseball. This was a great Little League baseball game."

Of course, things couldn't have started much worse in the game for Scituate, as pitching ace Blaine O'Brien was lost to a broken bone in his thumb on the first play of the game. Cohasset leadoff hitter Chris Rose hit a nubber in the air to the right of the mound, and O'Brien, reacting quickly, took one quick off-balance step before diving awkwardly toward it. The full weight of his body came down on his glove hand as he attempted to pull the ball in for the catch.

Rose reached as the ball dribbled away, and Chris Barrow was pulled from shortstop to replace the fireballing O'Brien, who was taken immediately for x-rays.

"There's no doubt about it: that was a tough break," continued coach Cooney. "But Chris pitched a heck of a game, coming in without any warning like that, and Harry (Rose) did a nice job I nthe last two innings. They both kept us in the game, and gave us a chance."

Cohasset's number two hitter, Pat Doonan, followed Rose by legging out a perfectly placed bunt down the third baseline. Mike Grimm followed with a well-executed sacrifice bunt, setting up second and third with one out. Cleanup man Cody Morgan then plated the game's first run wit ha chopper to second base. Barrow was able to stop the damage there, however, notching a strikeout for the third out.

Scituate got that run right back in the bottom of the first. Mike Signorelli drew a one out walk and then came all the way around wit h two outs when a nubber dow n the third baseline off the bat of Barrow was thrown away in to the right field corner.

A big play by Scituate centerfielder Brad Sportack ended another Cohasset threat in the third, as he pounced quickly on a Greg Gallagher one-hop shot off the fence in left center, and gunned out the Cohasset slugger at second with a perfect throw. Cohasset's Rose (2-for-2, walk, 2 runs) followed with what would have been an RBI double to right.

Hill scattered two hits and a hit batsmen over the second and third innings, but big defensive plays helped him get out of trouble as well. Second baseman Mike Grimm pulled off a big play, rushing to second after stopping a hard two-hopper off the bat Geoff Simpson for out one of the second frame and then firing to first to nip Simpson for the double play.

Grimm came up with another big stop in the third inning, as did Rose at first base, robbing Sportack of a hit with a nice back-handed dig.

Cohasset took the lead for good in the top of the fourth, as Hill drilled a two-out, two-strike offering from Barrow over the fence in right center bringing home Morgan (who had singled with out), to make it a 3-1 game.

Geoff Simpson and Pat Duggan combined to pull Scituate back to within one in the home half of the fourth with back-to-back two out hits. Simpson lined a single to deep center and then came all the way around when Duggan blooped a double just inside the right field line and just out of the reach of a diving Sam DeGiacomo a moment later.

Hill worked out of a two-on, two out jam in the fifth, inducing dangerous cleanup man Barrow into a pop out to Grimm at second for the third out.

Rose gave Cohasset back its two run lead in the sixth, no doubt taking quite a bit of the wind out of the Scituate sails. After spoiling a couple of two-strike pitches from cousin Harry Rose (who'd taken over on the hill for Scituate to start the fifth), Rose worked a lead-off walk, was sacrificed to second by Doonan, and then alertly came all the way around when a two-out grounder by Morgan bounced just behind Scituate's second baseman.

A fired up Hill recorded strikeout number seven for the first out of the sixth. This was followed by a pop out to shortstop Sam Chase and a two out walk that brought the potential tying run to the plate. Hill bared down, however, recording K number eight for the final out of the game, season and Little League career for he and his 12-year old cronies.

Needless to say, there was quite a celebration at the mound.

This core group of players also won the District championship as 7-year olds and have been close several times since, so to go out like this was something words can hardly describe.

"It's been a great ride with this group of kids," said coach DeGiacomo, who is also President of Cohasset Little League. "They've left us all with some great memories."

Notes

The Cohasset team rolled in to the championship game on a high, also having won the annual Hull Tournament this past weekend. The local lads beat Whitman, Hull-2 and Hull-1, and then knocked off Hull-1 a second time in the title game.

Cohasset players were named game Most Valuable Players for each of the four games, with the honors going to Greg Gallagher, Cliff Musto, Chris Rose and Brian Hill.

The 13-player roster was comprised of Ian Cundell, Sam DeGiacomo, Chris Rose, Cliff Musto, Pat Doonan, Tommy Chase, Greg Gallagher, Christopher Morgan, Alexander Hunt, Kenny Muir, Kyle Pinkus, David Snowdale and Brian Hill. DeGiacomo was helped in the dugout by coaches Bill Grimm and Bob Morgan.

Brian Hill warms up prior to final inning of Thursday's championship win over Scituate, as teammates Mike Grimm (second base) and Sam DeGiacomo (right field) look on.

Local cyclists ride for a cure

Goldstein, Michael Fechter, Michele Sacks, Peter Vitello, Robert Allen, Ron Sacks, and Susan McMackin.

The general consensus among the riders was that motivation for finishing the ride was never a problem. Everyone came with their own personal connection to cancer victims and survivors, and all had additional inspiration provided by the bravery on display from the young chemotherapy patients who are being helped through the Jimmy Fund.

At the rest stops along the away, each packed with a good number of eager volunteers, there were rows upon rows of pictures of children who had been afflicted by some form of cancer. Many of the riders said afterwards that this, in and of itself, made it possible for them to reach a little deeper when the thought of giving into the oppressive heat and dropping out of the Challenge popped in their heads.

"It was unbelievable," noted Allan, who rode the PMC for the first time, "the support, the people along the route, I just wanted to give something back."

Allan, who trained by riding three days per week in preparation, including two 60-mile jaunts in 100 degree heat in Florida, says he plans to ride it again next year.

His wife, Mary Allan, was one of the nearly 2,000 volunteers involved in helping the event run smoothly. She helped with getting water and energy drinks to the riders and aided in making arrangements for lodging on Saturday at the Mass-Maritime dorms in Buzzards Bay.

"What these people have done the past 22 years is phenomenal," she noted, also saying that she would like to join her husband on the ride in 2003.

"The whole feeling is great."

Michael Fechter did the race for the second time this year, going the whole 192 miles. Although he does not know anyone personally affected by cancer, he described that the feeling of finishing the race was "definitely a good incentive."

Fechter had been getting out of bed at 5 a.m. four times a week and riding 25-50 miles to prepare himself for the weekend.

The husband and wife team of Ron and Michele Sacks both completed the race for the first time with Joe Cassidy, Michele's brother-in-law, in their hearts. Cassidy has been diagnosed with gleoblastoma, the fastest spreading brain cancer known.

Cassidy had been visiting the Dana-Farber Institute twice a week to take part in an experimental clinic, but last Friday, just one day before the race, the institute took him off the treatment because his condition was not improving.

"With all the pain and suffering he has been through . . ." started Michele. "my riding does not even begin to compare. Everyone has one goal in mind: to help the Jimmy Fund. You really feel like you are a part of something universal."

Between the two of them, Ron and Michele sent out approximately 200 emails and letters to friends and relatives for donations. They have until Sept. 15 to finishing collecting, but over 160 letters have been returned and they are now "just around the corner from $10,000," according to Michele. "We just want to thank our supporters," she added.

Surely there are many at the Dana-Farber Institute saying the exact same thing.

Bay State Games funding slashed

nice if there was more corporate sponsorship, but I think most of the sports should get by, whether that means cutting out a few extras, or raising the tryout fees. There's definitely a strong interest there. I'm sure we'll find a way to continue."

Terry Kahn, who has coached the southeast boys lacrosse team to consecutive gold medals at the last two Games, expressed similar optimism for the Games, as a whole, but said he wouldn't be surprised to see some of the more expensive sports take a palpable hit.

"I don't think that the Games are in jeopardy," said Kahn. "I do think they'll be scaled back, particularly the Winter Games, which have always seemed a little superfluous to me. Rink time is expensive. So are lift tickets. I wouldn't be surprised to see them reduced, and perhaps even abandoned."

As for his own sport, which is clearly growing in popularity in this region by leaps and bounds, Kahn offered:

"My take is that lacrosse — at least at the boys' scholastic level — should be okay. It has, I believe, one of the largest — if not the largest — number of tryout participants of any team sport. That generates cash.

"So, too, do the numbers of finalists. The costs associated with it are, I think, relatively small. The refs (as do the coaches) volunteer their time. So, I suspect, does the medical staff. There may be a rental cost for Wentworth's field, and the jerseys cost something, but I feel pretty confident that the cash taken in from tryouts and finalist fees more than cover those costs.

The associated cost for soccer, as with most of the summer events, is likewise relatively small.

"We're talking T-shirts, refs and fields—that's all we need," offered Tassinari. "if they have to change to a cheaper location or not give away jackets to all of the teams, and maybe just the championship teams, so be it. The important thing is that the kids get to play. The games offer these kids a chance to play against some pretty good competition right before the high school seasons get underway."

Kahn was even more frank when it came to talking financial responsibility.

"Personally, I think the Summer Games for lacrosse are important for the growth of the sport. Camps have gotten very expensive, and recruiting camps have turned into meat markets, with hundreds of kids hoping to catch a coach's attention at every camp. The Games remain an affordable alternative, particularly for middle- and lower-income kids whose parents don't have $500 to send them to Maryland for four days."

That said, Kahn stated it was "hard to justify a state subsidy for amateur sports in times of financial crisis."

"This doesn't seem like it should be a priority," continued Kahn. "But I believe the Governor is mistaken in positioning its support as one of rich versus poor. The Games are one of the few level playing fields for kids (and adults, for that matter) of all economic backgrounds. There was a meaningful return on the state's investment, and hopefully the existing sponsors — and some new ones — will recognize that and maintain the current level of funding."

Speaking on that front, BSG Executive Director Cummings noted: "Our first goal is to try desperately to make up the deficit through increased corporate sponsorship and charitable donations. What this organization needs is for corporations to step forward and help us out financially. We have great support from Verizon and New Balance, but in light of our loss of state money, we need additional corporate involvement to continue operating. Companies that are committed to the local community have an opportunity to have a positive influence on the residents of Massachusetts, especially the thousands of kids we impact each year."

The MASF works year round to promote personal development, physical fitness, teamwork, good sportsmanship, mentoring and education through the medium of athletics to Massachusetts residents of all ages and abilities statewide.

The 2002 Bay State Summer Games just concluded, with 10,000 athletes participating in this year's events. Participants who take part in the Bay State Games 30 winter and summer events each year range in age from nine to 84 and hail from over 300 cities and towns across the Commonwealth. Over 2,000 dedicated volunteers supplement the MASF's full-time staff of four to make those events happen. With Verizon's support, the organization awards $12,000 in college scholarships annually and this year implemented a new Sportsmanship Initiative in conjunction with New Balance Athletic Shoe, Inc. that recognized more than 200 recipients as ambassadors of good sportsmanship during the 2002 Summer Games.

The effects of this budget cut will most likely be felt as early as the very next Games - the 18th Winter Games, scheduled to take place this February. "We have always tried to keep athlete fees as low as possible and we are extremely proud of all our events and programming. We will strive to avoid raising fees or cutting programs, but cutting programs and increasing participation costs will be a real possibility if we are unable to make up for the loss of such a huge percentage of our funding. We hope that we will not have to takes these steps, but they may prove necessary to prevent the Bay State Games from shutting its doors after 21 years," says Cummings.

Police advisory on strangers

Police Chief Robert Jackson asks that residents and beachgoers contact the police as soon as possible if they see someone acting suspiciously, especially around children.

"Recently there has been some concern about suspicious people and suspicious activity," Jackson said.

He explained in this day of cell phones it is often possible to contact the police right away; then the police have the chance to identify the suspicious person and investigate the incident. The call is also entered into the computer system, and background checks can be done if warranted, he said.

The caller should also stick around to fill police in on the incident. Or if the caller wishes to remain anonymous, he or she should give as much information as possible to the dispatcher.

"The public is our eyes and ears," Jackson said. "We depend on the public to keep us advised of problems."

He said in light of recent child abductions nationwide, there is more awareness about suspicious people.

"Any activity around a child that appears to be inappropriate should be reported," Jackson said. "We are part of the global community and we share the problems with the rest of the citizens in the country."

Jackson explained that sometimes a suspicious individual is just being friendly to children and nothing turns up in his background. Then police advise him not to be as friendly, he said.

"But without the ability to talk to the individual, it's difficult to find out what's going on," Jackson said about the need for residents to call quickly.

He said there will be increased patrols at the beach; officers will also get out of their cruisers and walk around. More tickets for those without stickers will also be issued.

Jackson said this summer is no worse than others, but in light of recent child abductions elsewhere in the country, it's a good time to ask parents to be more cautious.

"We can get lulled into a false sense of security that it can't happen here," he said.

Alarm records being updated

Owners of residences and businesses with burglar and/or fire alarm systems should contact chief civilian dispatcher Tom Wigmore at 781-383-1055 from 9 a.m.-3 p.m. during the week. Wigmore is updating the alarm system information in the computers at the police-fire headquarters so there is a current contact list. Contacts for weekends and after hours are also needed.

Written information can be mailed to Tom Wigmore, 62 Elm St.

July was a relatively busy month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 16 arrests, one for Operating After License is Suspended, one for Minor Transporting Alcohol, five for Possession of a Class D Substance, three for Protective Custody, two for Outstanding Warrants, two for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, one for Assault and Battery, and finally one for Open and Gross Lewdness.

During the month of July, the police department investigated 22 motor vehicle accidents, five of which resulted in personal injury. There were 184 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $7,325 in fines. Additionally there were 222 parking tickets issued for $5,525 in fines. There were nine criminal complaints issued.

Also in July our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,385 calls for police services, of those 114 were Emergency 9-1 -1 calls.

In the month of July there were two Breaking and Entering of a business and one Breaking and Entering of a residence.

Detective Sgt. Gregory Lennon completed a two-day Train the Trainer (SATURN) State Wide Anti-Terrorism Unified Response Network.

Warrants issued

A Cohasset man who allegedly exposed himself on three occasions will appear in Quincy District Court on Sept. 17 for a pretrial hearing.

Police arrested Jason J. Curtin, 27, of 505 Chief Justice Cushing Highway on charges of open and gross lewdness and lewd and lascivious in speech or behavior, following a report he masturbated in front of a walker in Whitney Woods at about 7 p.m., July 31.

"After the initial arrest, two other incidents came to light that happened previously," Police Chief Robert Jackson said. On Aug. 7, police issued two warrants for Curtin for the two previous incidents where he allegedly exposed himself.

GET THE BLUES AT THE FAIR

North River and Green Harbor music festivals set for Sundays

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

It should have been a good sign of things to come when last year's North River Blues Festival at Marshfield Fair headlined one of its first major nationally-known acts, Louisiana zydeco singer/accordionist and perennial in-concert crowd-pleaser Buckwheat Zydeco.

And this year, the 2002 edition of the North River Blues Festival, along with its companion event, the Green Harbor Roots & Blues Festival, are both set to deliver new and improved bills of hot national and local blues and roots-music acts at this year's Marshfield Fair. The two music festivals, which have become well-attended and much-anticipated fair fixtures on back-to-back weekends, take place this Sunday afternoon Aug. 18 and next Sunday, Aug. 25 from 12 to 7:30 p.m. Both events are presented by Marshfield concert promoter John Hall, who also owns Rhythm Room Records in Marshfield.

Headlining for the North River Blues Festival, which true to its name showcases music of the pure blues flavor, is Little Charlie & the Nightcats, a Sacramento-based, nationally-touring blues/R&B/jump-swing quartet and recording act on the respected Chicago blues label Alligator Records.

Headlining for the North River Blues Festival at the Marshfield Fair Sunday, Aug. 18 is Little Charlie & the Nightcats, a Sacramento-based, nationally-touring blues/R&B/jump-swing quartet and recording act on the respected Chicago blues label Alligator Records.

Also on the bill, another national artist on the Alligator label, guitar-slinging blues-howler Micheal Burks, plus veteran Boston area scene-makers the James Montgomery Blues Band, ex-Radio Kings lead singer Brian Templeton and his current self-named-with-Friends band project, and the Racky Thomas Band, with hard-working South Shore-based blues rockers Basic Black keeping the party going on the side stage in between the main sets throughout the afternoon.

The Green Harbor Roots & Blues Festival also in keeping with its name, will focus on blues-influenced and influencing musical styles such as country, rockabilly, bluegrass, Western swing and Cajun music. Topping this day-long lineup is Donna the Buffalo, a New York State-based quintet offering a unique fusion of bluegrass and Cajun styles and who Hall describes as "a great dance band."

Also appearing, singer/guitarist Sleepy LaBeef, the Boston-area native honky tonk-crooner/roots-rocker who's also a nationally recognized name, plus homegrown talent the Swinging Steaks, the Spurs and Lonesome Jukebox pleasing musical tastes from cowpunk country-rock to Texas Playboy country-swing to more bluegrass and Cajun dance sounds, and Boston area blues-boogie cats the Rampage Trio filling the breaks on the side stage.

"We're really excited about this year's festival in particular," said Hall. "Each year we've been able to pull together lineups of acts that are better than the last. And this year especially I think the acts in each Festival complement each other very well."

Although little known nationally outside of blues circles, Little Charlie & the Nightcats' following within the genre is widespread and rock solid. Together since the mid 1970s in various formations led by guitarist "Little" Charlie Baty and suave, strutting singer/harpist/frontman Rick Estrin, the Nightcats have earned critical acclaim and a steadily growing national fan-base for their uniquely versatile blues/R&B style, which moves with comfort and ease from urban, Chicago-style blues and Texas boogie to rockabilly, jumpin' jive swing and bop-pin', jazz-inflected R&B.

Topping this day-long lineup at the The Green Harbor Roots & Blues Festival Aug. 25 is Donna the Buffalo, a New York State-based quintet offering a unique fusion of bluegrass and Cajun styles.

Also notable is the Nightcats' double-punch of Baty's stinging, well-mastered guitar chops and Estrin's wry, witty lyrics and cutting, ultra-cool vocal delivery. The band's latest CD, That's Big!, released this year, is its eighth overall for Alligator and delivers the usual strong set of style-jumping, original blues tracks, with lyrics covering the range from good times ("Weekend Off," the title

Little Steven's big career

Guitarist gets busy with TV, a CD, and a new radio show

By Josh B. Wardrop

Pop quiz: who's currently the busiest member of the famed E Street Band?

Bruce Springsteen is a logical guess. After all, he's the leader of the band that's about to release, "The Rising," his first collaboration with the E Street Band since 1984's "Born in the U.S.A." He's also preparing to launch an accompanying world tour in October.

Little Steven

But if you picked the Boss, then you have been paying attention to the career of Steven Van Zandt, the guitarist who's best known to E Street residents as Little Steven. In addition to the E Street Band reunion projects, Van Zandt has two high-profile projects of his own — co-starring in another new season of the HBO drama "The Sopranos," and, closest to his heart, his own new nationally-syndicated radio show, "Little Steven's Underground Garage," which airs locally on WROR 105.7 FM.

Little Steven won't be spending much of the summer chilling on a Jersey Shore beach.

"Yeah, I could certainly use a little thumb-twiddling time right now," Van Zandt chuckles, via telephone from New York City, where he tapes each two-hour installment of "Underground Garage." The show, he says, is a celebration of a musical subgenre, garage rock, that began in the days of the British Invasion and has survived, under the commercial radar, ever since.

"Garage rock has a direct connection to the '60s," says Van Zandt. "However, defining it is a little subjective. It's much easier to say what garage is not, rather than what it is. You know, there's no drum machines or synthesizers — it's a music based around guitar, bass and drums.

"It started in '65, '66 — before we had such a thing as 'hard rock' — and it wasn't about epic songs or long solos," he adds. "What I enjoyed about it wasn't even so much the big bands that did it, but the strange, eccentric, irrelevant one-hit wonders. The simplicity and accessibility of the music is what appeals to fans of garage."

Early garage band standouts included Them (Van Morrison's first band) and The Animals, and later, New York punk legends The Ramones and The New York Dolls. But, according to Van Zandt, there were a plethora of bands that carried out the garage-rock sound and philosophy without being duly recognized. "You really could argue that The Rolling Stones are the most successful garage band that ever lived," he laughs.

Garage rock is still prevalent today, Van Zandt says, pointing to underground bands such as The Mooney Suzuki, The Shazam and The Anderson Council. It was his desire to bring attention to such groups — as well as more selfish motives — that led him to propose the radio show, which made its debut in April.

"I just missed hearing my favorite songs on the radio, you know?" says Van Zandt. "I guess I have a musical sensibility that's different from most people — I listen to different radio formats like classic rock, oldies and alternative stations, because they're all great for certain things. On

Eastwood's 'Blood Work' works

Blood Work (B)

Some critics fault "Blood Work" because it's linear, devoid of fancy footwork and computerized effects, written plainly (by the Oscar-winning screenwriter of "L.A. Confidential"), acted without affectation and requires nothing more to comprehend it than paying attention. These are negatives? Someone — I forget who — in whichever paper (I should stop reading others, it'll save on the agita) said that Clint Eastwood "flirts with racism" in a couple jokes. What happens is that a Mexican-American jerk cop (played well by Paul Rodriguez, who's cornered the market on this stereotype) keeps mocking our hero with stupid Hispanic references, then at the end, gives one funny thrust at Eastwood for something I can't give away, and Eastwood hits back with a funnier remark playing off an Hispanic element. This is "racism?" Gotta love those PC critics.

Terry McCaleb (Eastwood) is a renowned FBI agent whom we meet trying to foil a criminal known as the Code Killer, for reasons that become clear later, and he has a heart attack. Two years later he's retired on his boat, a lovely and clearly troubled lady, Graciella (Wanda De Jesus) comes asking him to investigate her sister's murder, and because he learns that his new heart is that of her sister, he agrees. Terry's doctor (Anjelica Huston, looking slightly more Morticia-ish than necessary to convey Heavy Worry) is furious that Terry will endanger his recuperation by taking on a case; he's only weeks into his body's coming to terms with this traumatic transplant.

With bumbling help from the slacker (a wonderfully laid-back and surprised-filled Jeff Daniels) on the boat next to his, Terry sets about scrutinizing data, including the video of the sister's murder, the police audio of a call for help, a similar murder a few weeks before that of the sister whose heart he lives with, and other arcana of forensics. He gets help from a former protege (Tina Lifford, excellently doing a part that could have declined into another stereotype, the Angry Black Policewoman, but doesn't), interference from the pointlessly irritated Hispanic cop and his partner (Dylan Walsh, a fine second banana who rarely gets a chance to shine and is wasted here) and led astray by a few red herrings.

Eastwood is 72, his Terry is in lousy shape, he huffs and puffs when he gallumphs, he whispers, with his shirt off he is not destined for a second career in an Abercrombie & Fitch Quarterly. The movie rings true, save for an overwrought ending. Practically no music mars it, the only kid in it (Mason Lucero) is neither obnoxious nor precocious nor sullen, and we like him, and when a cop's gun uses up its six bullets it doesn't miraculously come up with 500 more. "Blood Work" is all those things many critics don't like about it, but I do. It reminds us that frou-frou is unnecessary to make a policier do its job, and exuding plausible darkness doesn't require that a film be neo-noir. "Blood Work" eschews any self-conscious "look at me! how clever! how ingenious! how convoluted!"; it is competent, it tells its story and it ends. I found it gratifying, a tad scary, worth telling others about. I'm glad Eastwood is 72. He gives me hope.

German potato salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

German potato salad is, contrary to what I expected, a real dish in Germany, a simple combination of warm potatoes, bacon, vinegar, and onion. In America, this dish is often served cold, gussied up with chopped pickles or celery, and is often greasy and unappealing. I wanted to back to the original to find out how to make German potato salad the right way.

The first issue was the potatoes themselves and small red potatoes were the clear winner since they held their shape nicely in the salad. I decided to cut them before cooking (they should be bite-size) to reduce cooking time and to avoid shredded skins which often happens when slicing into a hot potato. Starting them in cold water, it took only 7 minutes of boiling until they were ready. Plenty of salt in the cooking water (1 tablespoon of salt to 4 quarts water) adds flavor and by splashing the warm potatoes with 3 tablespoons vinegar, the flavor is also enhanced.

As for the vinegar, red wine won the taste test when compared to white wine, cider, and balsamic vinegars. White vinegar was a close second. An additional tablespoon was used in the dressing bringing the total to a 1/4 cup. For the bacon, I used a quarter pound cut into 1/4-inch pieces and cooked it until well browned and crispy. I found thick cut held up better since it has a meatier texture. If you are not serving the salad immediately after it is prepared the bacon should be held and tossed in at the last minute. Every recipe I found included chopped onion or shallot sauteed in bacon fat. I tried using raw onion and shallot but it was too sharp. Next, I cut paper-thin slices of shallot and tossed them in with the hot potato – the shallot lost its crispness and bite but still had lots of bright, raw flavor. (Red onion also works well if you cannot find shallots.)

As for the other ingredients, I tried pickles which had an odd texture. Celery offered little but for unwanted crunch. Toasted mustard seeds work well but I have listed them as an optional ingredient since they are assertive. (The seeds add heat and crunch along with mustard flavor.) Ground mustard or mustard (the condiment) seemed overbearing and less interesting than slightly toasted seeds. The salad also benefits from chopped parsley and/or chives. A few tablespoons of either or a combination of the two adds fresh flavor and needed color.

The dressing for this salad turns out to be quite simple. Once the bacon is fried some of the fat is reserved in the pan. A tablespoon of vinegar is added and then I needed some liquid to add moisture. Chicken stock seemed to be the liquid of choice but the easy solution was to use some of the potato cooking liquid. You don't have to open a can and it adds both flavor and a touch of saltiness. I tried adding vermouth or sherry to the dressing and it was not improved but a pinch of sugar was a nice addition. These few ingredients were swirled around in the bacon-cooking skillet and after one minute, the warm dressing was ready to be poured onto the potatoes. As mentioned above the salad is best served immediately.

GERMAN POTATO SALAD

Please serve this salad immediately. It can be held for up to a half hour but, in that case, add the bacon at the last minute.

2 pounds small red potatoes, scrubbed and halved or quartered into bite sized pieces
1 tablespoon salt
1/4 cup red wine vinegar
1/2 cup paper thin sliced shallots, about three medium or 1/2 red onion sliced paper thin
1 tablespoon mustard seeds (optional)
1/4 pound thick cut bacon (about four slices) cut into 1/4-inch slices
Pinch sugar
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
3 tablespoons finely chopped flat leaf parsley or chives or a combination of both

1. Bring the potatoes and four quarts of cold water to a boil in a large pot over high heat. Add the salt and cook until the potatoes are tender but firm when poked with a paring knife or skewer, about 6 to 8 minutes. Drain the potatoes reserving 1/3 cup cooking liquid. Add three tablespoons vinegar to the potatoes, stir gently and let stand for one minute. Add the sliced shallots or red onion and stir to combine.

2. Heat a large skillet over medium-high heat. Toast the optional mustard seeds until very lightly browned, about 1 to 2 minutes. Remove and set aside. Cook the bacon in the skillet until well browned and crispy. Remove to paper towels to drain and pour off all but two tablespoons bacon fat. Add the remaining tablespoon vinegar, the reserved cooking water, and pinch sugar. Swirl the ingredients together and cook for about a minute. Pour over the potato mixture. Add the optional mustard seeds, bacon, freshly ground pepper to taste, and parsley and/or chives. Toss gently to combine. Taste for seasonings adding salt if necessary. Turn onto a serving bowl or platter and serve immediately.

Serves 6 as a side dish.

track) to bad ("Desperate Man," "Money Must Think I'm Dead").

"Our sound is a result of Rick (Estrin) and I playing together for 25 years," said "Little" Charlie Baty from a Long Island hotel room. "Each time we go into the studio to make a new album, we believe we learn more about the blues craft and are more comfortable making records. I think the last two or three albums especially reflect a certain patience and confidence that we now have in the studio and that wasn't there on our early records. Those early records were fine overall, but we were a bit nervous when making them, sort of musically and instrumentally trying too much to put everything over the top."

"Our versatility comes from the way we try to pick just the right blues or R&B style for each song," Baty said. "Rick is a very prolific writer and we believe by now we know our way around enough different styles to be able to cover a wide range. We basically try to have fun onstage, but also be musically tight. But I think the main reason we've stayed strong is that we've been able to keep bringing in new backup players over the years, which has kept the sound fresh."

The newest of the new backup players is recently added drummer Jay Hanson, whom Baty would especially like fans to welcome.

"I think he's the best drummer we've had yet. People will like his sense of theatrics," Baty said.

Little Steven's big career

my show, though, I combine them. I was really trying to bring back to radio a sense of what rock is."

The musician and actor is now learning the business of being a radio host. "When you have total freedom, it leads to a lot of questions," he says. "You find yourself with 1,000 possible choices to play, and there's nothing much that's particularly right or wrong regarding what fits."

Van Zandt says that selling radio networks on such a free-form experiment was no easy task. "The radio executives I pitched it too were a little nervous," he says. "I told them not to look at the playlist, but to listen to it. It's all fun, high-quality music that fits together. Part of the goal with the show was to break the obsession with familiarity we've developed in this country in the last decade.

That free-form format probably scares more radio stations than it inspires.

"The way I approached this was, 'I'm broadcasting Sunday nights, from 10 to midnight,' where they're not expecting to make any income, anyway. How much damage can I do to a station for two hours in the worst possible timeslot?" he laughs.

"Little Steven's Underground Garage" has, in fact, done just the opposite. Since its debut on a small number of stations in April, the show has been added to more markets each month, debuting in Boston in June. It now airs in 51 markets, more than double the number on which it debuted.

Even as the radio show gets bigger and more popular, Van Zandt has been finding more things to divide his attention. The new Springsteen album, "The Rising," hits stores July 31. Was it strange to be back in the studio with his old compadres for the first time since 1984?

"Not at all, which is probably because of the reunion tour," he says, referring to the massively successful E Street Band world tour of 2000-2001. "By the time we got back in the studio, we'd been on the road for 18 months, and were very comfortable together."

Van Zandt is a bit tentative when talking about "The Rising," simply because he doesn't believe in coloring listeners' perceptions. "There are elements of all of the previous work we've done — I don't want to paint too vivid a picture," Van Zandt says. "I'd rather let people hear it for themselves. But, I will say that with this album — more than ever, I think — the whole really does seem to be greater than the sum of its parts. It tries to offer a very wide and subtle emotional understanding of where things are in the world right now."

And, in addition to all the music — live and recorded, his own and by others — that Van Zandt is involved with, he's also about to return to TV screens, as HBO premieres the fourth season of "The Sopranos" on Sept. 15. Van Zandt plays Silvio Dante, one of Tony Soprano's closest "business associates." Is he hoping for a more expanded storyline this season?

"As an actor, I try not to get emotionally engaged in questions about how much screen time I get," Van Zandt says, diplomatically. "I try to be exactly what [series creator] David Chase needs me to be.

"Besides," he chuckles, "if I was any busier this year, I probably couldn't handle it."

"Little Steven's Underground Garage" airs Sunday nights, from 10 p.m. to midnight, on WROR 105.7 FM. For more information about the show, visit www.littlesteven.com/undergroundgarage.html.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14
A Scorpio moon can make for a challenging two-day period. A positive attitude is essential. Don't get caught up in worries, obsessions or dwelling on past hurts, traumas. Mercury prepares to align with Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio. Choose your words carefully. Careless or indiscreet remarks will come back to haunt you. Signing contracts or making important decisions are definitely off limits. The best way to channel today's influences is to stay busy with practical projects. Hard work will pay off.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15
Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Scorpio moon forms stressful alignments to Mars, the sun and Uranus until 2:13 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Mercury forms a 90-degree contact to Pluto at 11:29 a.m. Relief arrives at 7:25 p.m., when the moon enters upbeat Sagittarius. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Neptune sets the stage for a romantic evening.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 16
A Sagittarius moon generates a relaxed, optimistic mood today and tomorrow. It is okay to initiate new activities, make long-range plans, set new goals. If you have work projects to accomplish, you must have a clear plan of action and stick to it. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. There is one rough spot in effect between 7:54-10:54 p.m., when the moon aligns with Pluto. Slow down. Think before you do or say something you will later regret.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17
This is a wonderful day for vacationing, traveling, all outdoor activities. The moon continues its travel in adventurous Sagittarius. Be more spontaneous and follow your intuition. A lunar opposition to Saturn is in effect between 4:53-7:53 p.m. and may bring a lull period in the day. Take time out for yourself; rest and recharge your batteries. The remainder of the evening rates high for partying into the wee hours of the morning.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 18
At 1:15 a.m. the moon enters serious Capricorn, remaining there today and tomorrow. Zero in on commitments, promises you have made to others, debts you owe. Now is the time to follow through and fulfill them. Spend extra time with children or loved ones who need your attention. Catch up on work or study projects, especially if it's something you have put off for a while.

MONDAY, AUGUST 19
This is a day to get thing done. Tackle a full work agenda. Reassess your progress toward career goals; if necessary, create a new game plan. You can cut through obstacles, see the reality of a situation and make necessary adjustments. New starts are recommended before 4:13 p.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive. The sun interacts with Saturn at 4:34 p.m and Uranus at 8:52 p.m. Keep it light and go with the flow this evening.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 20
The final windup to this month's full moon begins at 9:16 a.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. The next few days will be action-packed. Channel high energy constructively. Focus on big work projects. Be open to new ideas and new ways of doing things. Today's influences rate high for achieving breakthroughs, if you are willing to experiment and try new methods. This is also a great time for partying. Be sure to take extra time out for fun and games.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21
Saturn and Uranus align at 3:17 a.m. The full moon continues to build up, as the moon travels in Aquarius. Current planetary influences are ideal for brain-storming, problem-solving. The moon interacts with Venus and Pluto this afternoon, and a Venus/Pluto alignment culminates in the early morning hours. This planetary combination tends to intensify and deepen emotions. You can strengthen the ties and add new depth and dimension to key relationships. Open the doors to a higher level of communication.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22
Gear up for a hectic morning. It is often difficult to sleep and get proper rest in full moon periods. Others may be moody, argumentative. The moon opposes Mars at 10:28 a.m. And conjoins Uranus at 12:49 p.m. Take it slow and easy. Drive defensively. The full moon culminates at 6:29 p.m., and the moon becomes inactive. Relief arrives at 7:11 p.m., when the moon enters Pisces. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23
Planetary action can make for another challenging day. At 3:17 a.m. the sun enters Virgo, remaining there until September 23. The moon continues to travel in Pisces, highlighting all creative endeavors, You can make gains developing arts and crafts, hobbies, artistic projects. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Applying alignments of Mars/Uranus and Mercury/Saturn urge you to use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Spend time alone; meditate for peace of mind.

Grow glorious grasses for year-round beauty

Green thumbs up

PART 3

A restful week among the windswept dunes of the Outer Banks of North Carolina provided an ideal change of scenery for this weary gardener after several months of tending to my highly cultivated landscape. Since early childhood, the rolling surf and endless sandy beaches have beckoned my family southward to this pleasant refuge rich in history and legends. Of all these vacation memories, none is more lasting than the image of golden sea oats swaying in the salty breezes, their arched clusters shimmering in the setting sun against a backdrop of the blue-green ocean.

In my youth, the dunes were blanketed with broad expanses of these attractive beach grasses but hurricanes, souvenir collectors and uncontrolled building nearly wiped them out. Conservation efforts, including planting projects and protective measures, have restored some of the dunes in this area to their original beauty and sea oats once again flourish along the beaches although it is heartbreaking to witness the development that has transformed this serene wilderness into a vacation hotspot.

Several years ago, I discovered a garden worthy version of my beloved dune oats, appropriately referred to as northern sea oats (Chasmanthium latifolium). Each summer, clusters of dangling oats appear in August rekindling fond memories. Tolerant of a wide range of soils in sun or partial shade, this 3 to 5-foot tall clumping grass has slightly broader leaf blades than many other ornamental grasses and the seed heads are long lasting when cut and dried. The plant readily seeds about and might be considered by some to be a nuisance but I transplant or weed out the excess.

The family of fountain grasses (Pennisetum) is another favorite characterized by dense clumps of narrow arching leaves and late summer flowers that resemble caterpillars or bottle brushes. Several selections of Pennisetum are currently available including an 8-inch dwarf called 'Little Bunny' and a number of compact 2-foot varieties including 'Hameln' and 'Cassian'. A recent introduction, 'Karley Rose', produces lovely pink tinged flowers and an especially late-blooming cultivar 'Moudry' demonstrates thick, black seed heads. Perhaps the most irresistible of all the ornamental grasses is the crimson fountain grass (Pennisetum setaceum rubrum), which produces stunning burgundy leaves and long, elegant, arching flowers but regrettably, this sensational grass is very tender and must be treated as an annual. Mass plantings of fountain grasses have become popular in commercial and public landscapes. They thrive in average soil' s and full sun.

Blue-tinted foliage is a very desirable addition to the various shades of green that dominate our gardens and several ornamental grasses are available to provide this attractive color contrast. The blue fescues (Festuca glauca) form tidy 8-inch mounds of very thin, blue-gray foliage that are effective as edging plants in borders or foundation plantings. Blue oat grass (Helictotrichon) also demonstrates steel blue-gray leaves but is more upright in form, its spiky leaves reaching a height of 12 to 24 inches. Both these grasses maintain their color well during the winter months and prefer sunny, dry, well-drained sites

Switch grasses (Panicum) are lovely additions to the landscape. I have grown these carefree grasses for many years and have found them to be extremely well behaved and noninvasive providing a fine vertical line to my borders with airy open seed heads that give a hazy effect in late summer and early autumn. Several cultivars offer blue-tinted foliage reaching heights of 3 to 6 feet including 'Dallas Blues', 'Prairie Sky' and 'Heavy Metal'. A recent introduction, P. 'Shenandoah', has markedly red to burgundy tones and stays quite compact at under 3 feet. These hardy grasses will acclimate to nearly any soil type in sun or part shade.

For shady gardens, several extremely attractive grasses offer marvelous color and textural contrast to broad-leafed hostas. The family of sedges (Carex) forms dense clumps, many resembling mop heads, ranging in height from 6-inches to 3-feet. Moisture retentive soils in partial shade are ideal where many remain totally evergreen throughout the year although some will benefit from a spring haircut to remove winter-damaged foliage. Variegated forms include C. morrowii and C. 'Evergold' and a relatively new introduction C. 'Ice Dance' that slowly spreads to form an attractive evergreen ground cover. The leatherleaf sedge, C. buchananii is most unique with its unusual delicate, pinkish-brown leaves adding an entirely different color tone to the predominantly green border. A personal favorite is C. 'Bowles Golden', which produces a stunning lime-green to yellow 2-foot clump that glows in the shady border.

Perhaps the loveliest of all the ornamental grasses is Hakone grass (Hakonechloa macra). This absolutely charming, graceful, arching grass slowly spreads to form a mound that cascades like a waterfall and is an invaluable addition to the shady border. The most commonly grown variety is 'Aureola' characterized by golden leaves highlighted with rich dark green stripes. Grow in humus-rich soil in light shade alongside ferns, hosta, and astilbes or nestled among rocks.

For ease of culture and long season interest, few perennials rival the grasses and sedges. It may require some searching to find a broad selection and a little experimentation to feel comfortable with their placement in the garden but your long-term rewards will make the process worthwhile.

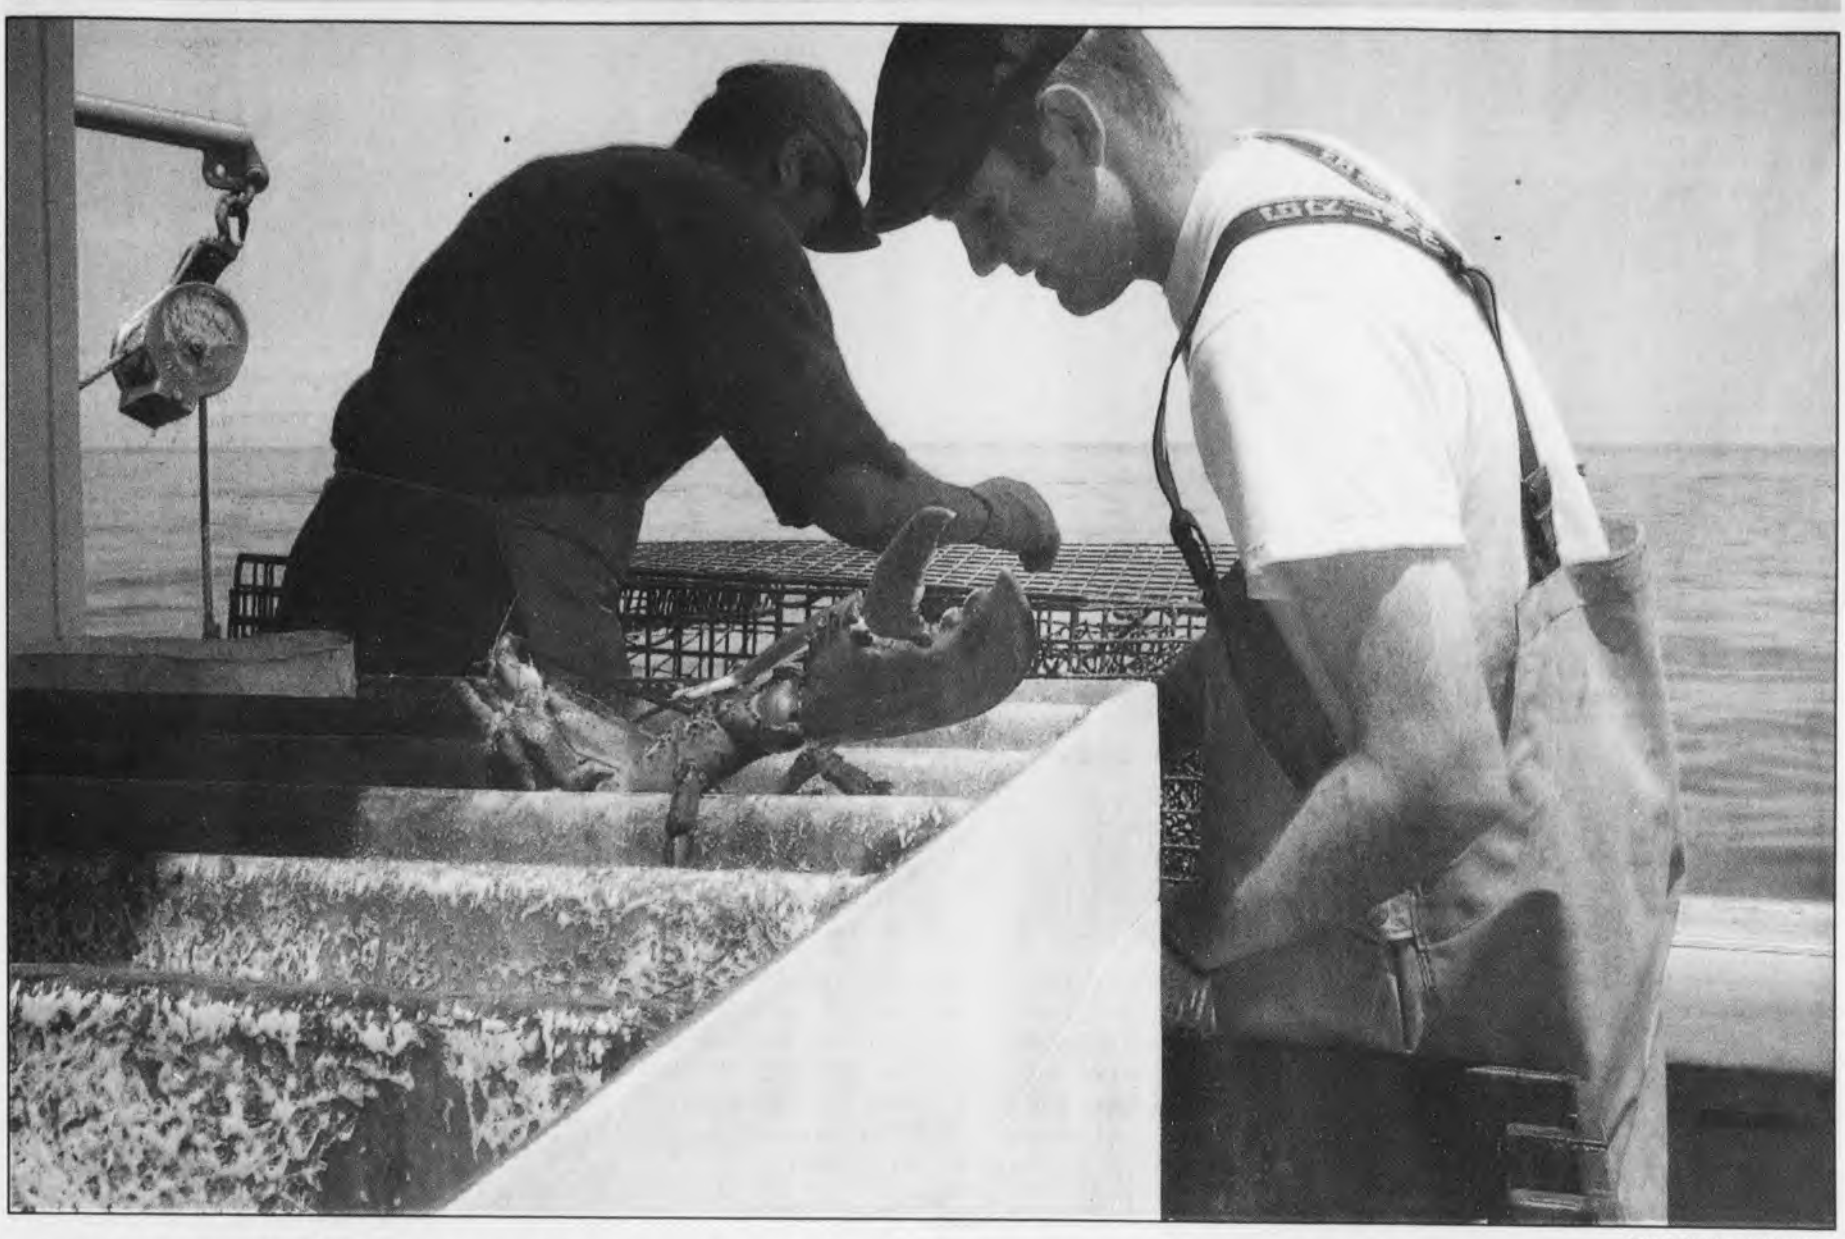
Living on the Sea



STAFF PHOTOS/SUSAN HANEY

Lobstering is a way of life for Tucker Patterson, left, who is joined by his nephew Jeffrey Patterson for the summer on board the "Jason James" during a recent trip out to sea.

A fish story

Fishing is woven into the fabric of our communities — the geography in our coastal towns forever dictated it would be.

Water is all around us, from the North River that snakes through the South Shore to the Atlantic Ocean, to our bustling harbors.

Land ill-suited to farming made harvesting the bounty of the sea a sensible and profitable alternative over the years.

Abundant archeological evidence shows that even before the early settlers made their homes in Scituate and Marshfield, the Wampanoag Indians fished from the banks of the North River and the cliffs in Scituate, literally living from the sea.

Today that centuries old living is in jeopardy.

The postcard picture images of fishermen making their way out to sea from Scituate and Green Harbors is in danger of becoming just a memory. Sweeping federal bans and restrictions put into place over the past several years have increasingly made it difficult for local fishermen to make a career bringing in the catch of the day.

An entire way of life - - that captures so well the fiercely independent spirit of the New Englander — is on the line.

In "Living on the Sea" we hope to provide a glimpse into the life of local fishermen, sharing their satisfaction in bringing in a big catch, and the hardships they face as regulations increasingly put limits on that catch, the number of days they can work and how far they must travel to make their time at sea worthwhile and profitable.

We're also taking a closer look at the restrictions, why they've been set and how they impact fishermen, while also examining their efforts to set the record straight by generating scientific evidence about ground fishing stocks.

The history of the trade, linked to the booming ship building industry of the region, and a look at where today's catch ends up — from fish markets, and grocery stores to fine restaurants — are also included along with some discussions on the health benefits in a fish-full diet.

This is a story that hits close to home and to the heart. These hard-working men and women who rise before the sun and weather rough seas to bring seafood to our tables didn't walk off a box of Mrs. Pauls' fish sticks. They are our friends and neighbors who carry on a tradition that is an integral part of our communities' rich maritime heritage.

A day in the life

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

Tucker Patterson hasn't missed a sunrise in 12 years. His day begins before 5 a.m. — well before the sun comes up.

As his 42-foot boat, "Jason James" pulls away from Scituate Harbor each morning, Patterson doesn't look back. He doesn't wish he was still sleeping or that he was working behind a desk.

He only wishes for lobsters — and lots of them.

Patterson has been lobstering for more than a decade in Scituate — the fourth generation in his family to do so. He learned the trade from his grandfather, his father, his uncles and his brother. And now he's passing the expertise on to his nephew Jeffrey, who ventures out to sea during the summer months with Patterson, and has even taught his oldest daughter Shelby some tricks of the trade.

"Things have changed throughout the years," Patterson says as he motors toward his next line of lobster traps between Minot and Egypt beaches. "But you learn what to do — it's not that tough."

Patterson's clear navigation through the waters just beyond the harbor demonstrates just how well he's perfected this lifestyle. Following only a map committed to memory, he leads his boat to each line of lobster traps to be picked up today. He turns on a navigational device showing the topography of the ocean floor — but doesn't seem to need it.

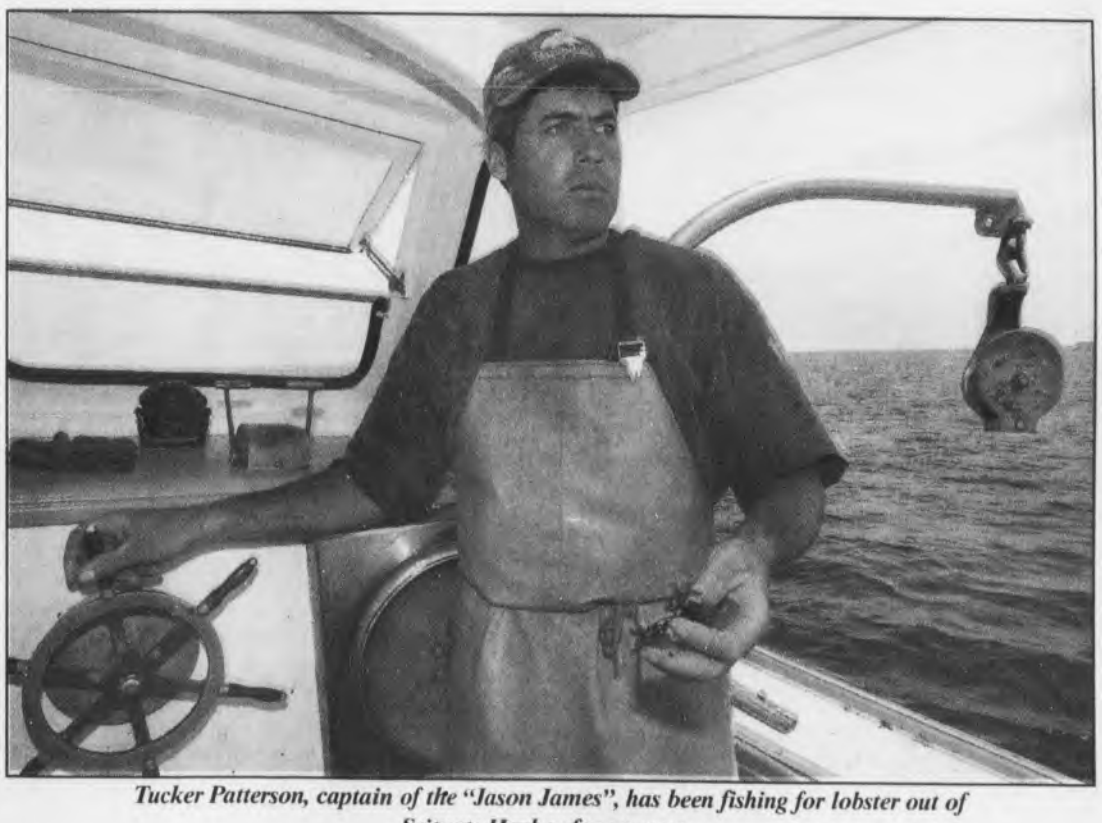
"You get to know your way around," he said. "I pretty much know every inch of this water."

Patterson maintains two lines of lobster traps off the Scituate coast, with 400 traps in each line. Federal regulations allow lobstermen only 800 traps to be used during the course of the year — Patterson will typically pull out 400 traps each day, alternating what line he travels.

His 19-year-old nephew Jeffrey waits on the back of the boat, observing the action of other fishing and lobstering boats out working. The sophomore at Massachusetts Maritime Academy has been helping his uncle for the past three summers — just for "something to do."

But for Patterson, it's more than a hobby or pastime.

He shares a certain comfort with the ocean that has become like his second home.



Tucker Patterson, captain of the "Jason James", has been fishing for lobster out of Scituate Harbor for 12 years.

As he approaches his first line of lobster traps with great ease, he takes a deep breath to begin his workday.

Patterson spots the buoy that marks the northern and southern points to the line — the beginning and the end. Reaching the buoy, he pulls it on deck and hooks the rope onto a self-controlled wheel.

Almost automatically, the lobster traps rise out of the water onto the edge of the boat one after another.

"We get a whole mess of stuff in these," Patterson says, pulling out crabs, fish and other ocean-bottom dwellers. And upon locating the few and far between lobsters in each trap, Patterson is lucky to keep one or two.

With the lobster and fish stock depleting during the past several years, fishermen and lobstermen are forced to abide by strict federal regulations — dictating the number of traps lobstermen can use and the size of each lobster.

Keeping his 3 1/4-inch measuring stick by his side at all times, Patterson tests each lobster as he pulls it from the trap. Measuring from the base of the abdomen before the tail to the lobster's eyes, it must be larger than 3- 1/4-inches to make the catch.

Fishing: In Depth

Most of the lobsters Patterson brings in are immediately returned to their home in the water — they're not big enough to keep yet.

"These guys are all too small," Patterson says as he tosses each young lobster back into the ocean. "We'll get 'em in a few years."

But the lobsters can't be too big either. A separate 5-inch measuring device is used less frequently, but a necessity to assure the lobsters are not larger than the 5-inch maximum size.

"It's like our insurance policy," said local lobsterman Fred Dauphinee, on shore taking a break from his day of lobstering. "We'll have these bigger guys to fall back on if the stock ever depletes in the future."

Lobsters have been known to grow to more than 25 pounds in size — some 100-years old and more than 3-feet in length. The average lobster grows to 2-pounds in its years on the ocean floor.

Patterson must also check the sex of the lobster — female lobsters with thousands of black eggs lining the under side of its abdomen are "V-knotched" on the tail with a knife and thrown back to the ocean.

"We do that to tell the next guy this lobster is still breeding," Patterson says while knotching a "V" into one lobster's tail. He explains that female lobsters can carry more than 100,000 eggs at one time, and will breed multiple times in its lifetime. "We see the 'V' and we know to throw it back. This one's not done (breeding) yet."

With the few lobsters left from that one trap, Jeffrey bands the claws

DAY IN THE LIFE, PAGE 8

The historical hook

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

The Men of Kent who settled Scituate in 1636 most likely had planned on a life of farming. But like colonists up and down the rocky Massachusetts coast, the early residents of Scituate and neighboring Marshfield found the soil ill-suited for farming and turned to the sea choosing to harvest its bounty instead.

They lived off the sea and made a living there, too.

Archeological evidence shows that years before the European settlers did so, the Wampanoag Indians fished from the banks of the North River and the cliffs, says Marshfield historian Cynthia Krusell.

For the colonists, the fishing business would go hand in hand with what became the region's biggest industry in the 18th and 19th centuries — shipbuilding.

"The Geography fueled the economy," says Scituate Historical Society member and Marshfield resident Fred Freitas. "The land wasn't good for farming," he says, noting that local histories refer time and again to the early settlers asking for more land in the hopes of greater success tilling the soil.

"They had to do something else. They had to supplement with something else."

That something was linked to the rivers, harbors and the ocean that surrounded them and it included fishing, ship building, shipping, trade, and in Scituate — Irish mossing.

Samuel Deane's "History of Scituate" shows the fishing industry dates back to the town's founding and even earlier noting that the first "fishing station" was set up in Scituate in 1633. Cod and other fish caught in those early years was dried and traded for goods in countries like Spain and Portugal.

The first recorded fishing restrictions according to Deane's History came in 1670 when a court order was set preventing fishermen from taking mackerel out of season.

"It seems that even back then there was concern about the fishing stocks," notes Freitas.

Despite these early restrictions fishermen in the area would enjoy plentiful seasons in the early 18th century. "It wasn't uncommon for a vessel to take in 1,000 barrels in a season" Deane wrote. And by 1770 there were upward of 30 vessels in the mackerel industry working out of Scituate.

The businesses that grew up along these working harbors were related to marine industry, coopers and sail makers and blacksmiths among others.

"The whole valley was involved in these trades," says Freitas. "It drove the entire economy."

But like every other budding industry in the colonies, international events like England's wars with the French and later the Revolutionary War had a large impact on the fishing business, notes Scituate Historical Society member Dave Corbin.

"There were definitely highs and lows. It was not until after the War of 1812 when we had established rights on the high seas that we began to have a booming business in fishing and shipbuilding," Corbin says.

In Scituate the fishing business would reach its peak in the 1820s and '30s, says Corbin. Deane's history supports this by noting that 35 vessels were fitted out from Scituate in 1830 weighing from 50 to 150 tons with crews of six to 15 hands. In 1828 alone, more than 15,000 barrels of mackerel were taken.

The industry was lucrative but always dangerous, notes Corbin, who wrote an article on the ill-fated fishing schooner Maine, for a historical society newsletter a few years back. This week marks the 156th anniversary of wreck of the Maine — a 60-ton fishing vessel out of Cohasset with a crew of 12, captained by Joshua Litchfield of Scituate.

The Maine was bound for Cape May New Jersey where the mackerel were plentiful. The schooner got underway Aug. 16, 1846 but had not even passed Provincetown when a thick fog rolled in and the crew decided to drop anchor for the night. What the fishermen aboard the Maine did not know was that the ocean liner Hibernia was underway too, bound for its homeport of Liverpool. It had left Boston earlier that day and was heading right for the fishing schooner.

Safety devices that have made the industry less perilous, like lights, horns, radar and other electronic navigational instruments weren't on board in those days, and the crew of the Maine had no warning, no time to get out of the way as the Hibernia plowed into the schooner and literally cut it in two. The Maine sunk in minutes and the six that survived the crash were plunged into the pitch black waters of the Atlantic. Clinging to the wreckage of his boat, an injured Capt. Litchfield held on for a short time before disappearing under the waves. The remaining five crew members held on longer, but might not have lived to tell their harrowing tale had it not been for the crew of the Hibernia, who pleaded with their captain to stop and search for survivors.

"The Captain of the Hibernia, didn't want to stop," says Corbin. "A veteran of channel shipping between London and France, the captain knew the rule was not to stop." Stopping involved shutting down and reversing the steam engine on the ship and taking in the sail during the middle of the night to search in the dark.

"Fishermen are a special breed of people. Basically, if you're earning a living from the ocean, you have to be a dedicated, hardworking individual or you're not going to make it."

Scituate lobsterman
Gilbert Patterson

"But the crew protested," Corbin says. "They launched the lifeboat and listened. They were about to give up when they heard the cries of the men, rowed to them and pulled them to safety."

The Maine survivors were brought to Halifax, Nova Scotia, before they returned to their homes on the South Shore. But such survival stories were rare in those days.

"When fishermen set out to sea, that was it," says Corbin. "You didn't hear from them for weeks and months."

Amazingly, Capt. Litchfield's body was found off the Cape and another local fisherman was able to identify him and have his remains brought back to Scituate for burial, Corbin says. Nearly 60 years after their brush with a watery grave, the five survivors of the Maine were reunited in Scituate and their amazing story retold in a 1904 article in the local newspaper.

Not long after the Maine disaster, the fishing industry in Scituate began a significant decline replaced by a more profitable, safer venture — Irish Mossing.

In her book "Irish Mossers and Scituate Harbour Village," Barbara Murphy again alludes to Deane's History of Scituate which states that 30 years after the mackerel boom of 1828, the business had completely ceased. Lobstering and especially mossing — known as farming under the sea — the collecting and drying of the lichen known as carrageen had become big business in Scituate and put the small seaport on the map. Carrageen was a major ingredient for foods like pudding and beer and later products like tooth paste.

Murphy excerpts from an 1879 newspaper clipping found in historical society archives that states the production of 10 to 15,000 barrels of moss brought in $50,000 annually to the town, a sum shared by about 150 families at that time.

Irish immigrant Daniel Ward is credited with starting the industry which involved mossers raking the moss from the rocky bed of the ocean, piling it in dories and then laying it out on the beach to dry/bleach in the sun. The same dories were also used for lobstering which also enjoyed a sort of Renaissance in the mid-19th century.

Lobster, Corbin notes, was not considered worth harvesting in great quantities until that time. Previously it was used to feed servants and even ground up for use as soil fertilizer.

Lobstering would become big business and one of the main fisheries out of Marshfield — where fishing is still referred to as the leading industry.

But indeed what might be most remembered about fishing in the 20th century is the restrictions that have been placed on the industry, regulations that have drastically cut into the numbers of men and women who choose to make a living at sea.

Lincoln Alfred Wood of Beechwood Cohasset, Luther Litchfield of Scituate and Isaiah Lincoln also of Cohasset. Six other crew members including Captain Joshua Litchfield of Scituate perished in the 1846 collision with the Cunard ocean liner the Hibernia.

What was in the early part of the last century a multi-generational business, is rarely so any more.

Rather than face an uncertain future, fisherman Scott MacKinnon has given it up to open a fish market and restaurant in Marshfield.

"My son has jumped out," says Scott's father, Scituate fisherman Bob MacKinnon. "We sold our boat and now he runs Captain Mack's"

While angered by the restrictions on his business, Bob MacKinnon is hanging on. He has bought a smaller, 40-foot vessel and plans to do some scalloping in Scituate where he'll be the only game in town.

But before the restrictions, MacKinnon remembers better days for the fishermen and more boats working out of Scituate and Green Harbors.

"Back in the '70s and '80s we had three big swordfish boats 70 to 90-feet operating out of Scituate," he recalls, along with draggers, scallop boats, gillnetters and lobster vessels. Now there's just a handful of ground fishermen working out of Scituate, and none in Marshfield — where today only the tuna fishing and lobster business is thriving.

Many who once fished for cod and flounder have switched to lobstering to stay afloat. But with more lobstermen, there will be fewer lobsters to take, notes MacKinnon. And even the lobster fishermen are feeling the pinch.

"It used to be that you brought your pots in before Christmas," says MacKinnon. "Now you have to do it year-round."

"It hasn't been a great year for lobstering," notes Scituate native Gilbert Patterson. Patterson took up lobstering 23 years ago after retiring as the town's chief of police.

"I was only 53 years old," says Patterson. "My wife asked me what I wanted to do and I says I think I'll do a little fishing."

Patterson bought himself a 30-foot lobster boat and started fishing. It wasn't new to him. His father was a carpenter by trade but took summers off to moss and lobster in Scituate. Patterson remembers more and bigger lobsters in those days. But advances in fishing including hydraulic equipment have made it, and the lobstermen more productive, notes Patterson, whose son Tucker has made a career of lobstering. While it was not his choice for a profession, Gil Patterson has a great deal of respect for fishermen.

"Fishermen are a special breed of people," he says. "Basically, if you're earning a living from the ocean, you have to be a dedicated, hardworking individual or you're not going to make it."

Tucker is making it.

"He's a survivor and he works very hard and puts in long hours," Gil says of his son.

Other fishermen aren't as fortunate, notes Patterson. Some have taken on part-time jobs to supplement their income when they cannot be at sea, doing the work they love.

And still others, grappling with restrictions on the hours and days they can fish have invested in a second boat to be able to fish more hours, but greatly adding to their own expenses, says longtime Scituate Harbormaster Elmer Pooler.

"The fishermen spend a lot of money in this town," notes Pooler.

"They're being murdered by the federal government," he says, referring to the restrictions on the trade. Pooler worries about the members of the town's commercial fleet, which due to closures in local fishing grounds, must travel far off shore to bring in their catches.

"These boats, some of them are only 40-feet, are going too far out, steaming 16 hours out to make a living. It's only a matter of time before we start losing some of them," laments Pooler. "I hate to see them going out so far, but they have to do it to make a living and it's not right.

I try to keep track of them, they're like my children," he says of the fishermen he's come to know during his 34 years in the harbormaster's office.

Fisherman Tom Turner's Lighthouse Road residence, is known as the "jug in the chimney house." Legend has it that Turner put the jug in the chimney facing the northeast wind as a sort of weather gauge. If Turner heard the wind whistle through the jug and down his chimney, he knew he didn't have to get out of bed that morning because the northeast wind was blowing and it wasn't fit outside for fishing.

But former Marshfield Harbormaster Larry Bonney sees it differently. He supports the restrictions that he says are necessary to protect the fishing stocks.

"Some of these guys want to be out there to catch the last fish," Bonney says. "The regulations are long overdue, the fishing stock is being depleted and the federal government and the state are concerned about the future — we all should be."

And while the future remains unclear at the start of this new century for those who have chosen a life working on the sea, the local fishermen still embody the qualities embraced by New Englanders, notes Frietas.

"If you're a fisherman, you're your own boss, living life on your own terms, but at the beck and call of nature. You exude that fierce independent spirit that New England is all about."

Allure of fishing is fading for families

Future of industry in doubt

By Dan Gravel
DGRAVEL@CNC.COM

In an article for the Toronto Star Weekly in 1922 a young Ernest Hemingway wrote about tuna fishing off the coast of Vigo, Spain: "There are plenty of tuna and they take the bait. It is a back-sickening, sinew-straining, man-sized job even with a rod that looks like a hoe handle. But if you land a big tuna after a six-hour fight, fight him man against fish when your muscles are nauseated with the unceasing strain, and finally bring him up alongside the boat, green-blue and silver in the lazy ocean, you will be purified and be able to enter unabashed into the presence of the very elder gods and they will make you welcome."

Hemingway had a lifelong passion for fishing, a subject that appears in much of his work, from several of his famous short stories to the classic novella, The Old Man and the Sea. He once said that the great ocean currents are the last wild country left in the world, a notion to which many local fishermen, who have felt the primordial rage of the sea during a winter storm, will likely attest. Hemingway, like others, recognized the undeniable poeticism of fishing and its connection to literature and mythology. With those connections in mind it is possible that one can perceive that there is something poetic, and perhaps charmingly provincial, about the fishing trade being passed within families from one generation to the next.

But such lineal processions, once common in fishing towns such as Marshfield and Scituate, are now virtually non-existent. The "elder gods" of which Hemingway wrote, are no longer passing the torch. Scott MacKinnon, who had to quit the industry last fall under the weight of burdensome federal regulations, knows too well how and why this has happened.

The son of a fisherman, MacKinnon followed in his father's footsteps when he became a fisherman after graduating from Marshfield High School in 1984. Father and son worked together for several years, running a boat for another owner until they were able to buy their own boat in 1988.

"It wasn't bad back then. It was a lot of fun and there was a lot less pressure," he said. "We'd go out when we wanted to, fish where we wanted, and sell where we wanted. You could make a good year's pay."

Robert and Scott MacKinnon were gill-netters, captaining the Lady Irene through the Stellwagon Bank. On some days they would catch thousands of pounds of cod, haddock, and flounder, enjoying the freedom of working for themselves on the open ocean.

But in a few short years things changed.

"It really got crazy in the late '90s but in the mid '90s it started," said MacKinnon. What started was governmental regulations that were tolerable for fishermen at first, but continued to grow in severity until they limited the ability of many, including MacKinnon, to make a good living from the sea. The number of days fishermen could work were cut back and many areas were closed to fishing, all to help revive the dwindling stock of cod and other fish.

"It really was the final straw when they took January, February, and March away from us," MacKinnon said of the federal inshore ban on groundfishing, which was enacted in 1999. "It killed the fishing in this area."

He said no fishermen could honestly say fish stocks were not shrinking. He furthermore believed there was a need for restrictions, but thinks they went too far, too fast.

"In saving the fish they're wiping out the people. When you lose people from fishing they're not going to come back."

Such are the effects of federal restrictions that people are being forced out of the industry and newcomers are not stepping in to take their place. The younger generation of would-be fishermen have seen the hardships experienced by veterans and are choosing different lines of work.

"There are very few young guys doing it now," said MacKinnon. "There's just no future in it. Mostly kids will start out working on a boat to see what it's like. They see today what it's like. They're working harder and not making much money, whereas as a high school kid I worked hard and made a lot of money. I made more than my friends."

Times have changed for Scott, left, and Bob MacKinnon since this picture was taken in March of 1999 at Scituate Harbor. Scott has since left the fishing business and Bob has scaled back his operation, concentrating on scallop fishing.

Laddie Dexter, a Marshfield lobsterman who has been hunting in the waters off Brant Rock for more than four decades, has a similarly bleak view of what lies ahead for area fishermen. He hears the death knell for the next generation of fishermen in the complaints about governmental regulations and in shrinking profit margins.

He and MacKinnon agree that "mom-and-pop" type fishing operations will in the not too distant future, be forced out of businesses by large factory trawlers. Fishing, they say, is getting more and more expensive, and it will soon only be worthwhile to large companies with lots of capital.

"If I wasn't 63 years old I would be looking for something else," said Dexter. "There are not a lot of second-generation fishermen. It's basically non-existent because it's a dying business. People are more educated now and they're deciding that for the amount of time you've got to put into it the return is not great."

This progression is something he is accepting, if reluctantly. Dexter said he enjoys working for himself, and he still has fun doing it. Aside from motoring toward shore with a boatload of lobsters, he also savors the experience of just being on the water. Sometimes a whale will follow him around for half a day, he said, or a school of porpoises will swim by. Always a beautiful sight is when the sun comes up over a pitch black ocean.

"Laddie is an older guy," said the 35-year-old MacKinnon. "He's been fishing all his life. When he leaves no one is going to replace him."

Unlike Dexter, MacKinnon was unable to stay in the fishing business. With a wife and three young children, he needed a job that would more reliably allow him to pay the bills and put food on the table. In June, he and his wife, Cara, opened Captain Mack's, a seafood restaurant on Ocean Street. He was forced to sell his boat so he could buy the restaurant, and now he sells the same kinds of fish he used to haul in. Though MacKinnon is settling into the restaurant business, learning as he goes, he still seems to wish he could be out amidst the excitement the ocean.

"I miss it a lot, not knowing what was going to happen each day," he said. "I just enjoyed fishing, catching fish. It was rewarding."

Judge's ruling sends fishing industry into a frenzy

New restrictions would further squeeze local fishermen

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

The clock is ticking for local fishermen.

Those who live off the sea have one year to prove the scientists and environmentalists feeding the federal government information are wrong about the condition of fishing stocks off the shores of New England. If they're unable to show the fishing stocks have rebounded to a satisfactory level, they'll have to live with the strictest federal regulations ever imposed on the Massachusetts fishing industry.

Many believe the decision rendered by federal judge Gladys Kessler in April goes overboard and will soon put most small commercial fishermen on the endangered species list.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, called the judge's decision a "foolish ruling."

"The government has to strike a balance between protecting the species and the environment and protecting the economic rights of the fishermen," Hedlund said. "At the moment, we're not doing a good job at that. The pendulum is swinging against the rights of those who fish for a living."

State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, said the "onerous restrictions" set by Judge Kessler "would wipe out most of the fishermen in Marshfield and Scituate."

Hedlund, along with State Sen. Bruce Tarr, of Gloucester, has been instrumental in several Senate initiatives to help bolster the floundering fishing industry.

Through a cooperative effort with the University of Massachusetts-Dartmouth, the Legislature has earmarked funding to help scientists and fishermen prove to the federal government that the stricter regulations are not necessary.

"One of the charges of the program is learning the migration pattern of cod, their reproduction patterns... and compiling data that can be used in a fight in the courts," Hedlund said.

Hedlund said $200,000 was funded through a line item in the Massachusetts Office of Business Development budget to help bring fishermen and scientists together to study the issue.

The funds are being used to develop fishery recovery equipment, a cod-tagging program, as well as fund other scientific studies, according to Hedlund.

The UMass program came out of the Coastal Caucus, which was set up several years ago in the Legislature to focus primarily on fishing issues.

Hedlund said in the current fiscal year 2003 budget, $180,000 was appropriated for the UMass partnership to assist fishermen experiencing hardships and to study alternative fisheries and alternative stocks. In addition, $380,000 was set aside to implement some of the technology available for studying fisheries and to pursue electronic reporting of groundfishing areas.

"We're trying to come up with a model that creates what fishermen are actually seeing to give our argument some credibility when we go to court," Hedlund said. "We're trying to take the fishermen's anecdotal arguments and make it scientific.

"What the fishermen tell us doesn't jive with the Conservation Law Foundation's assumption and some of the data the feds are using," Hedlund added.

The Conservation Law Foundation immersed itself into the fishing frenzy in 2000 when it joined other environmental groups to sue the New England Fishery Management Council for its lack of action on environmental efforts relating to Amendment 9 of the Magnuson Act.

The impact of Kessler's ruling in U.S. District Court — known as Amendment 13 to the Magnuson Act — siding with the CLF lawsuit, puts severe restrictions on cod and other bottom-dwelling fish caught in New England waters effective August 2003. Possibly the most costly portion of the judge's decision is fishermen are now being asked to take the average catch of the last five years, from 1996-2000 and reduce that number by 20 percent. The original language called for fishermen to take the best year in that time period and reduce it 20 percent. Hedlund said the change in the formula is the hook that could snag the local fishing industry.

The decision also reduced the number of days allowed to fish to 88, and if those days are not used, fishermen would lose them.

During a rally of local fishermen at Scituate Harbor in February of 1999 protesting increased regulations, a man dressed up as Uncle Sam hangs a fisherman.

The court has ordered the National Marine Fisheries Service to come up with a plan by August 2003 that would not only satisfy fishermen, but also address the environmental concerns and rebuilding the depleted fish population.

While Hynes said he isn't sure what the $180,000 for the Umass-Dartmouth program buys for local fishermen and the state, he does see part of his job as getting the message across to other legislators about the importance of the fishing industry to coastal communities like Marshfield, Scituate and Cohasset.

"The bulk of the legislators don't understand the relationship of the historic first industry — fishing — to today's economy," Hynes said. "In today's economy there's a huge effort to educate."

Hynes said most fishermen are as sensitive to depleted fishing stocks as environmentalists because they make their living off the sea and their children often follow in their footsteps.

Hynes said one area the federal government needs to shore up its effort is to look at the current fishing climate based on the latest scientific data.

"There needs to be a balance," Hynes said. "Don't make judgments based on assumptions. Regulations are being based on opinions and judgments made in the mid-90s."

Hynes would also like to see the federal government come up with uniform regulations that are fair and don't put local fishermen at a disadvantage. Hynes said regulations need to apply to foreign fisheries through international trade agreements. Currently Canadian fishermen can fish in the Gulf of Maine and aren't obligated to the same restrictions as U.S. fishermen.

"Then they ship their fish into our market," Hynes said. "That happens with great regularity."

Lobstermen are particularly vulnerable to unfair regulations. While lobstermen aren't feeling as much of a pinch in terms of regulations, there is still cause for concern for those fishermen as well. This year, the lobster season began with prices more than 20 percent lower than normal, mostly due to lack of demand. That, combined with one of the worst lobster seasons in recent memory last year, has some worried that commercial fishermen facing stricter regulations will flood the waters with even more lobster traps in an already crowded market.

Part of the reason for last year's drop off was the number

Commercial Fishery Regulations:

The following possession limits will be in effect per quarter with adjustments when 60% of the quarterly quota is projected to be taken:

Quarter 2, April – June: Thursday, June 6 was the last day to land sea bass for the second quarter. The fishery was closed from June 7 through June 30.

Quarter 3, July – September: The possession limit will be 500 pounds per day and then adjusted to 100 pounds per day on July 16th for all gears or 700 pounds per week for the sea bass pot fishery.

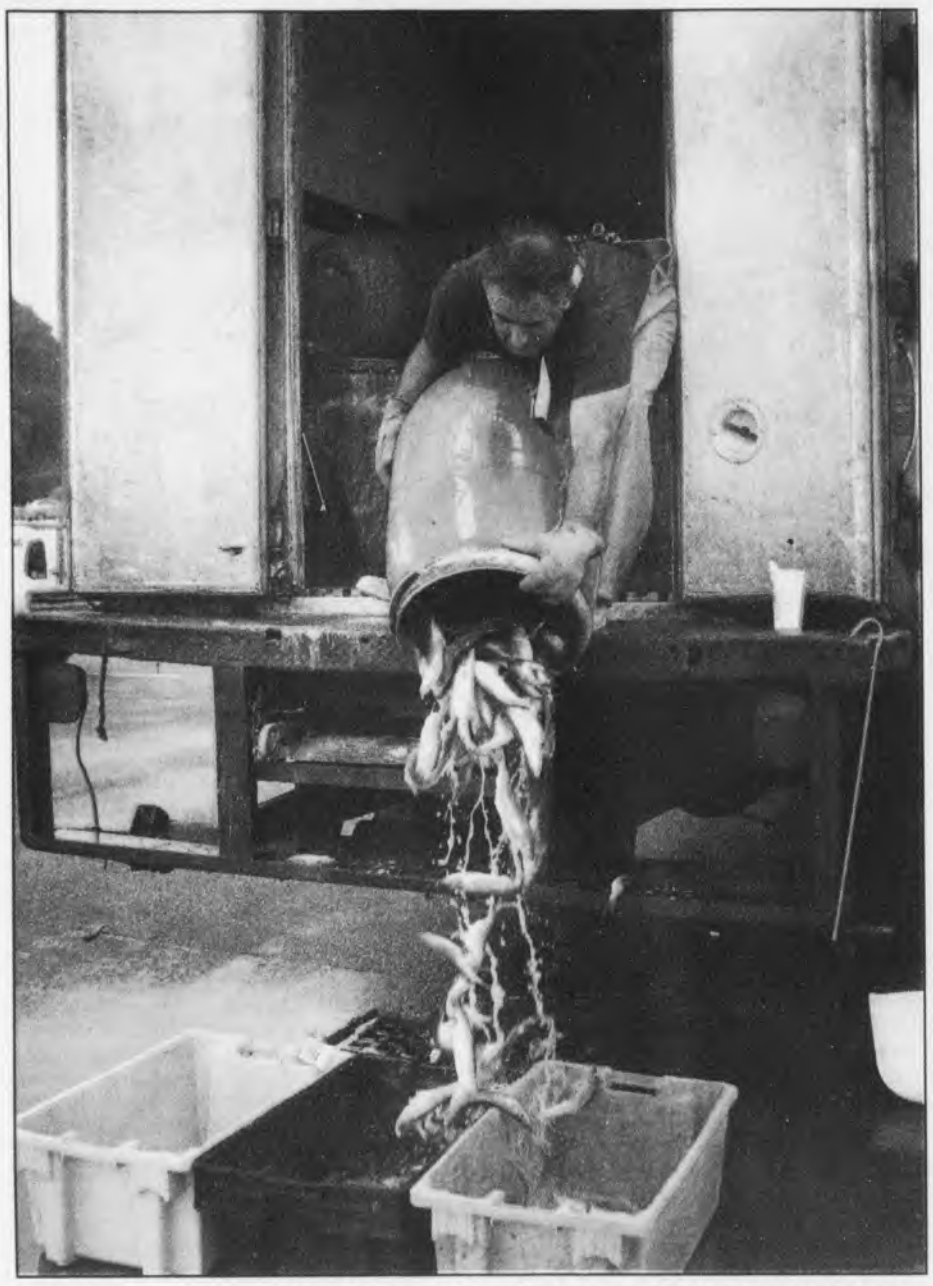
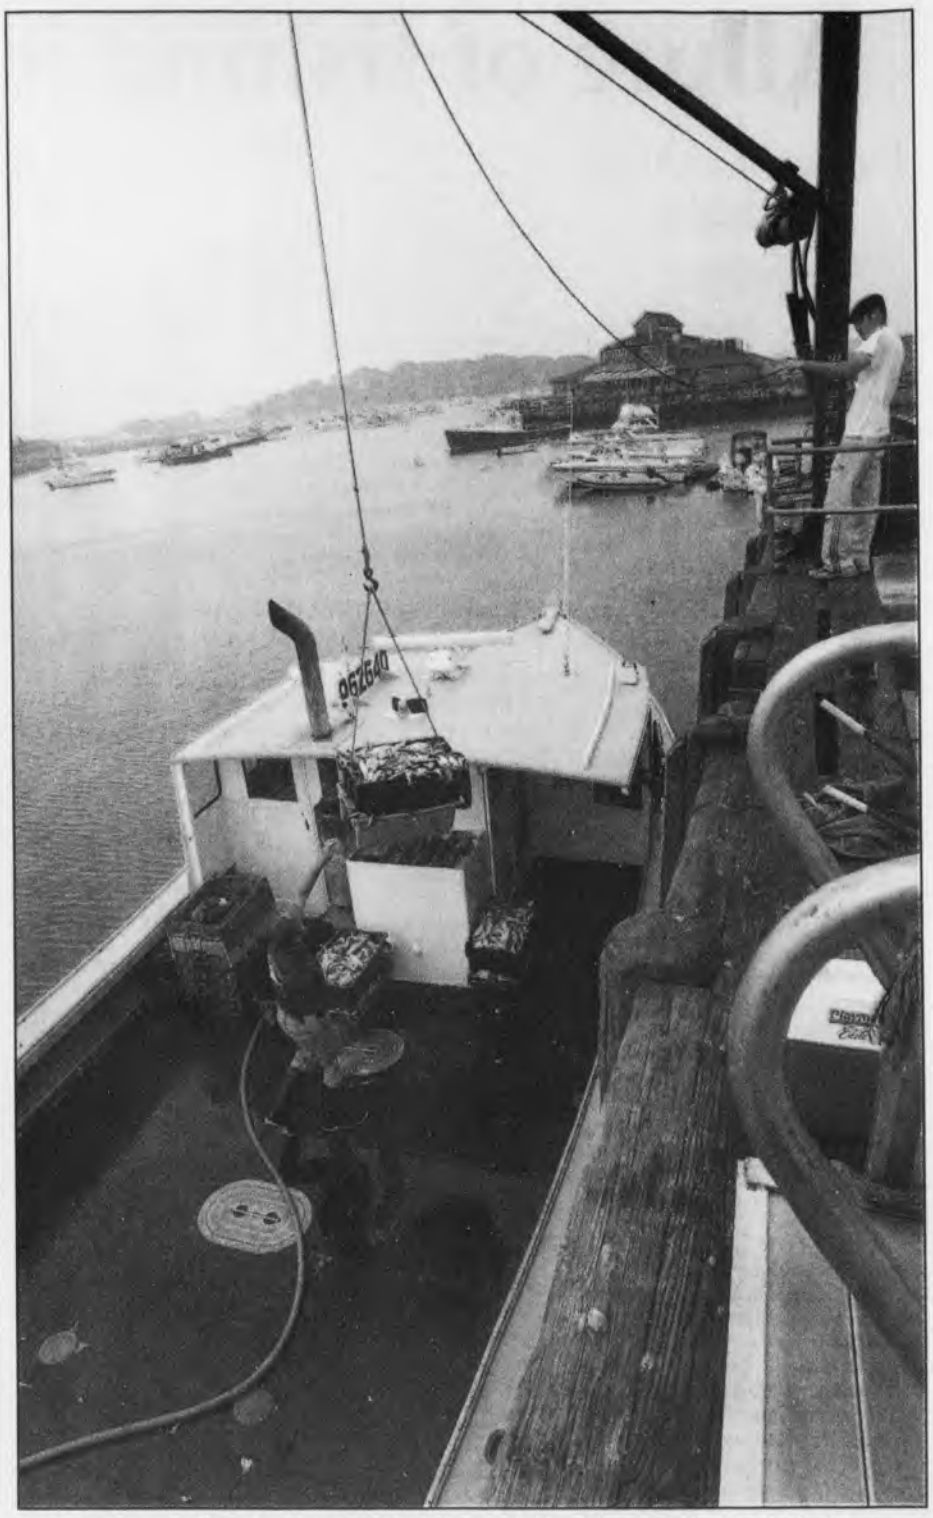
Quarter 4, October – December: The possession limit will be 750 pounds per day and then adjusted to 100 pounds per day for all gears or 700 pounds per week for the sea bass pot fishery.

Weekly quota numbers are generated using data from the "Dial-a-Fish" telephone-based call-in system. All dealers purchasing fish directly from fishermen are required to report to an automated data collection system with their purchases of quota monitored species for the week.

A day at sea



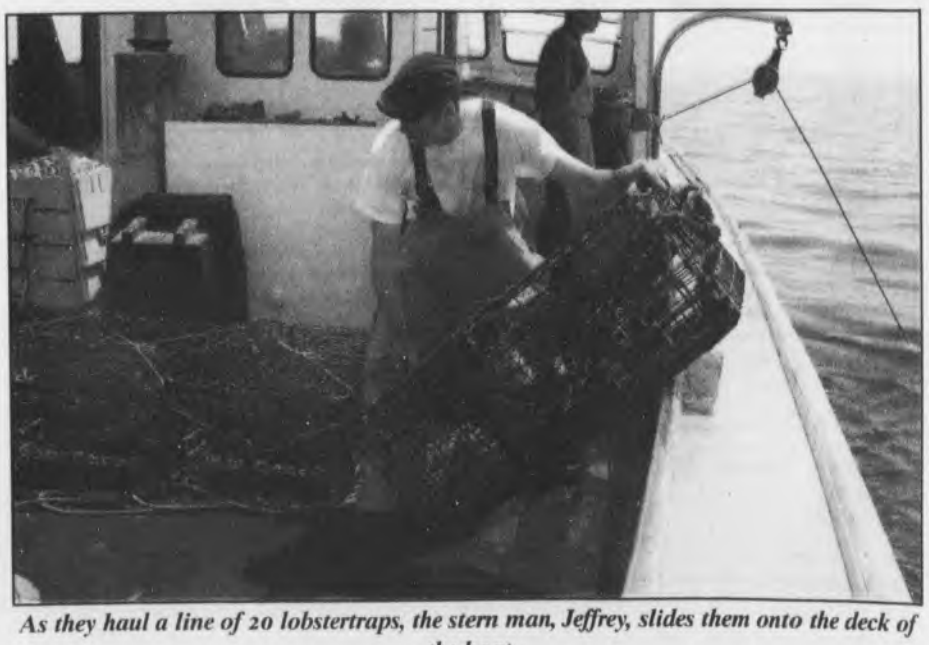
The lobstermen's day begins at 5 a.m. as Steve Sones pours bait they'll use in lobster traps into buckets.



Using the winch at the Town Pier in Scituate, Jeffrey Patterson lowers the bait onto Tucker Patterson's boat, the "Jason James."

The "Jason James" heads out of Scituate harbor early in the morning to begin the day at sea lobstering.

Using the hauler to pull the trap out of the water, the captain and stern man, Tucker and Jeffrey Patterson, pull it onto the rail of the boat.

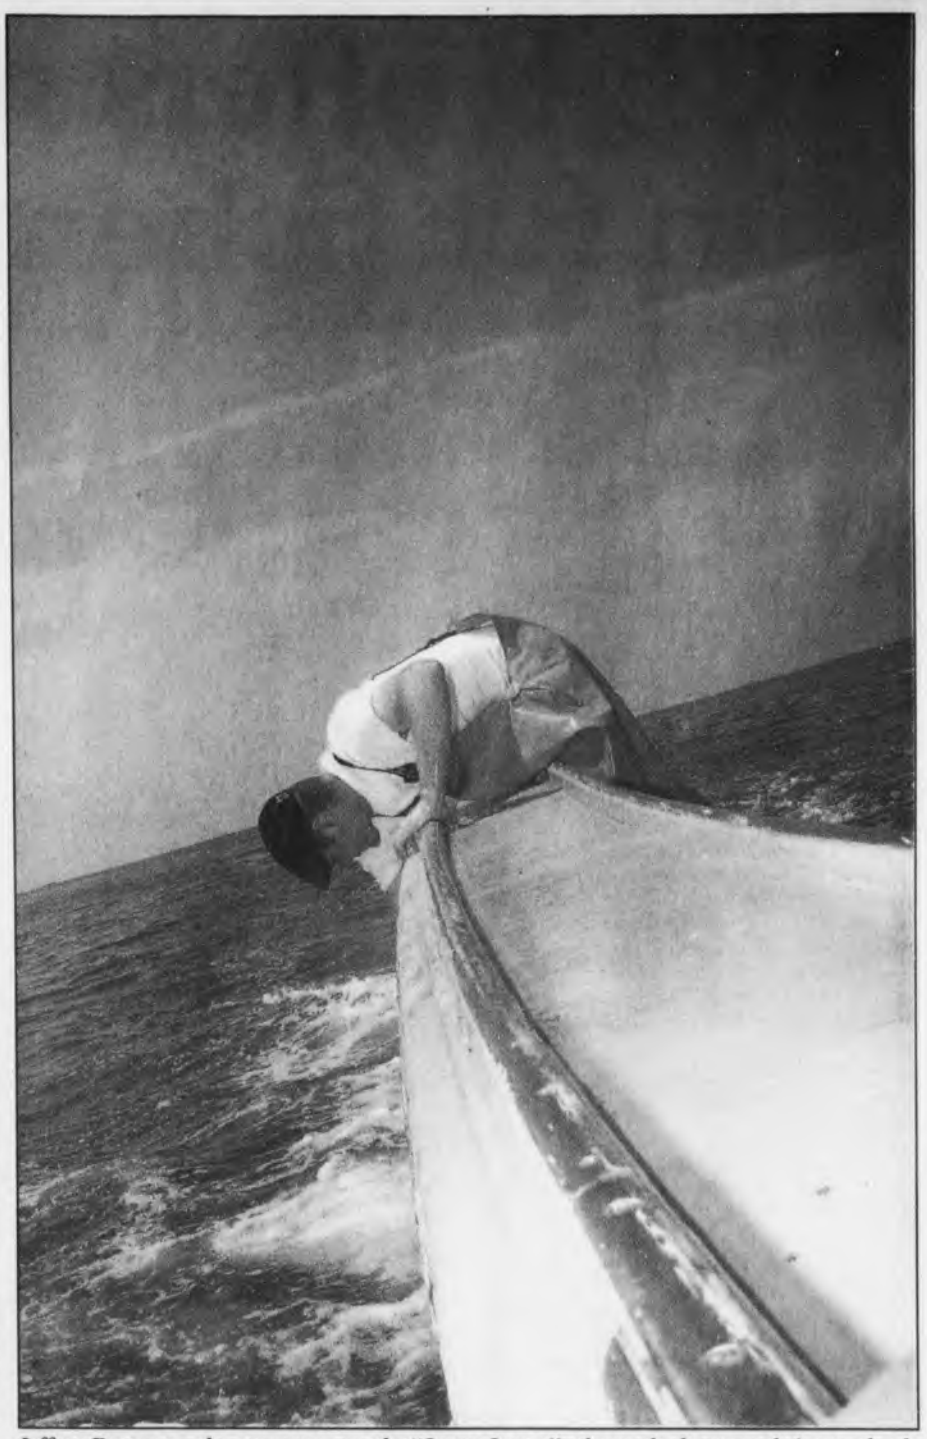


As they haul a line of 20 lobstertraps, the stern man, Jeffrey, slides them onto the deck of the boat.

A female lobster carries thousands of eggs and must be notched and released.

Jeffrey Patterson puts herring in the bait bag to re-bait the lobster traps.

Tucker 'V' notches the tail fin of an egg-bearing female lobster.



Jeffrey Patterson, the stern man on the "Jason James", cleans the boat on their way back to the harbor.

Tucker, left, and Jeffrey Patterson unload their day's catch onto the dock in Scituate Harbor.

Lobster traps are re-baited and returned to the bottom of the ocean

The day's catch for the Patterson's is delivered to the lobster pound in Humarock.

Tucker Patterson collects payment for his day's work.

Club offers reel fun for fishermen

Tuna fishing flourishing

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

When it comes to catching fish around the South Shore, there are fishermen who make a living off the sea and those who fish for fun. The Green Harbor Tuna Club helps fishermen combine the best of both worlds.

Peter Morello, a past president of the 32-year-old tuna club at Green Harbor Marina, has been involved with the organization for 17 years. While the club's main priority has been to promote recreational fishing for bluefin tuna, Morello said the club does much more than that.

Morello, who is also a member of the General Category Tuna Association, a group that oversees tuna fishing in Massachusetts, said the club does more than promote fishing and holding tournaments.

"We supply data (on tuna fishing) to the Massachusetts community," Morello said. "We also support the scientific community so we can get out there and fish just like anyone else."

Morello indicated most of the club's members are "weekend warriors," but noted there are some members who area actually commercial fishermen.

Over the years, the club has expanded its horizon and promoted catching other types of fish as well. The club holds yearly fishing tournaments focusing on species like bluefish, cod, wolfish, cusk, yellowfin tuna and dolphin.

"We have members from all over the state," said Green Harbor Tuna Club President Charlie Foshey, adding the club is the oldest of its kind on the South Shore.

The club was originally formed in 1971 with the purpose of holding a bluefin tuna tournament each year, but it has grown into something bigger. These days, there are about 200 club members with a total of about 65 boats. Instead of holding one tournament like it was originally founded to do, the club holds about eight different types of fishing tournaments each year.

"A while after the club was formed, more people started getting involved and it became more and more family-oriented," Morello said. "A lot of families wanted to compete in tournaments so more of them were added."

Of course, time has changed the fishing industry since 1971. Countless fishing restrictions have been put in place over the years that have crippled the industry.

"It's very difficult for most fishermen these days," Morello said. "The season is limited, the amount of fish you can catch is limited not to mention that you have to fish according to factors like the weather and the sea."

The tuna industry, however, has not been impacted greatly by restrictions, according to Morello. In fact, he said they actually helped.

"Fishing for tuna is as good as it was 17 years ago," he said. "Since I've been in this club, I've seen the fishing get better and better. We've seen the stock increase and I think that's actually because of fishing restrictions. Without restrictions, we could really hurt the fishery." He added the limit on catching tuna is two per day.

Bill Crowley, a part-time tuna fisherman from Marshfield, said the tuna caught in the waters off Marshfield and Scituate is sought after by people around the world. He said Japanese tuna bidders often come to this area in order to buy tuna rich in oil for the purpose of making Sushi. The auctions are usually held in Gloucester, Boston or New Bedford.

Foshey said one pound of tuna could cost anywhere between $3 to $30 depending on the quality of the fish and its oil content. The more oil, the better.

Crowley said the tuna fishing season runs from June until December. He said he stays part-time because of the unreliability of the industry. He added fishing for tuna is just a tough job overall.

"I know guys that have taken 60-70 trips without catching anything," Crowley said. "And it's really expensive to buy all the equipment."

Crowley said there are fishermen who catch six tuna per season and there are those who catch a lot more than that. Crowley said one year he knew of a local fishermen who had brought in 36.

The Green Harbor Tuna Club supports fishermen like Crowley and according to Morello, one of the club's main jobs is to "make sure everyone gets a fair shake." But one of the club's foremost priorities is to have fun and support the fishing community.

"I got into the club because I'm really into fishing," Foshey said. "When I first decided to get into it, it looked like fun and it still is."

Foshey said one of the aspects of the club he's most proud of is its support of the Special Olympics on a yearly basis. All proceeds from the yearly bluefish tournament are donated to the organization.

"We usually raise more than $10,000 with that tournament," Foshey said. "The members get a lot of enjoyment out of that. It's just a worthy cause."

He said the club has been supporting Special Olympics for the past 17 years.

Morello was one of the members who decided to get involved with the Special Olympics and he actually ran the bluefish tournament for some time. He said he believes it's important for the club to support those in need.

"It's been very rewarding," he said.

of lobsters caught off the Maine coast, plus an influx of additional lobsters from Canada. Those factors, along with the negative effect of colder than normal waters and the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, wholesale price for lobsters dropped from $4 per pound to $3 in the weeks following the terrorist attacks, according to the Massachusetts Lobstermen Association.

Coming off last year's poor showing, lobstermen in Massachusetts are now faced with minimum-size increases in Areas 2, 3 and Outer Cape Cod, as well as "v-notching" egg-bearing female lobsters in Area 1, which is the Gulf of Maine. Those regulations were issued by the Division of Marine Fisheries effective July 1.

According to the Div. of Marine Fisheries, "these actions are expected to satisfy the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission that recently found the Commonwealth out of compliance."

A coalition representing fishermen in the Northeast and mid-Atlantic states have been working on a plan to increase the number of egg-bearing female lobsters. As the status of lobster stocks differs along the Atlantic coast, the coalition divided lobstering waters into zones to craft conservation plans responsive to specific areas. Bay State lobstermen work in four different zones and have created conservation plans differing in each area.

The new law sets a minimum size of 3 9/32 inches. Effective Dec. 31, the minimum size for a lobster will be 3 5/16 inches.

Lobster is the biggest single fishing industry in the Northeast. According to the Division of Marine Fisheries, 14.6 million pounds of lobsters were caught in 2000 at a value of $67.5 million. Only scallop sales brought in more money that year, accounting for $85.3 million of the state's $288 million fishing industry. Lobster accounted for 25 percent of all fishing revenue in the Northeast in 1996. The lobster fishery was valued at $242 million and supported about 50,000 jobs.

As commercial fishermen and lobstermen try to wade through these tough times, the state government has provided assistance beyond funding for scientific study and technology. In addition to those measures, the Legislature has provided $4 million over the last three years for a free health care pool for fishermen impacted by the increasing number of restrictions. The Fishing Partnership Health Plan is administered through a partnership with Tufts Health Plan and Caritas Christi, the health care network of the Archdiocese of Boston. The plan provides comprehensive coverage, including preventative health care, office visits, chiropractic, hospitalization and emergency coverage worldwide.

Fish such as salmon, tuna and mackerel may be more than just "brain food." Several recent medical studies suggest that a diet which includes fish has benefits beyond the commonly accepted notion that eating fish makes us smarter.

The healthy omega-3 fatty acid found in fish and fish oils helps reduce the risk of heart disease, according to a study of more than 100,000 people published in the Journal of the American Medical Association. Omega-3 lowered cholesterol, prevented blood clots that form in heart attacks and lessened the chance of irregular heart beats. The study indicated that the best source of healthy fatty acids are found in cold, deep salt water fish such as salmon, tuna, mackerel, arctic char and sardines.

A study printed in the health journal Circulation showed that fish oil supplements reduced sudden cardiac death by 42 percent in the three months following a heart attack. Omega-3 is believed to help regulate electrical activity in the heart muscle cells and reduce arrhythmia.

A 1998 research study done for the European Journal for Clinical Nutrition found that eating fish can also lessen the symptoms and fight off the onset of rheumatoid arthritis.

The British Medical Journal recently published a study that suggests even pregnant women can greatly benefit from eating fish regularly. The study said that eating fish during pregnancy decreases the risk of premature delivery and low birth weight.

The American Heart Association recommends eating about two servings of fish per week. Of course, not everyone can afford to eat salmon and mackerel that often, but most dieticians say canned tuna and sardines are just as adequate as, say, freshly cooked salmon or swordfish.

Cooking fish to perfection is a simple process, especially during the summer, according to Gordon Price, a chef at PJ's Countryhouse in Scituate.

"Barbecuing the fish in foil is the best way to cook it this time of year," said Price. "Wrap the fish in parchment paper or foil and add some lemon lime juice and fresh herbs and put it right on the grill. You can use salmon, swordfish, and flakier fish like cod and even tuna."

"Basically the easiest way to cook it is the oven but you can still put the fish in a foil pocket with some vegetables and you've got a nice one deal meal," Price said. "Just keep it simple... you don't want to lose the flavor."

Lobster Ravioli

Ravioli Dough (make in pasta machine on medium or you can just buy it)
1 lb. lobster meat
1/4 lb. fresh mushrooms
2 1/2 tsp. butter
1 tsp. mint shallots
2 cups light cream
2 1/2 tsp. flour
2 or 3 tsp. quality light sherry salt & ground pepper to taste

Boil lobsters, remove meat. Clean & mince lobster meat. Wash & mince mushrooms.

In sauté pan, soften butter, add shallots. Cook 2 to 3 minutes until translucent. Add lobster meat and mushrooms and cook for another minute. Slowly sprinkle flour over mix, stirring constantly. Add sherry, stirring constantly. (If you want it a little pinker, shake in a little paprika.) Add light cream and reduce for 2 to 3 minutes on low. The mixture should be on the medium to thick side. Remove from the heat and spread it out on a flat pan to cool.

Roll out 2 ravioli pasta sheets. Mark out 2 1/4" x 2 1/4" squares. Add 3/4 tsp. of mixture into the marked square. Lay the second sheet on top and use a ravioli tool to roll and seal. Transfer onto a sheet pan that has been lined with wax paper & sprinkle with corn meal (this helps prevent sticking).

Sauce: 2 cups light cream; 2 tsp. butter; 2 tsp. flour 1/2 oz. brandy; 1/4 tsp. paprika salt & pepper to taste

Melt butter. Add flour, brandy, light cream & paprika. Salt & pepper to taste. Keep warm in a double boiler.

How fish get from the sea to your plate

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

In its journey from the net to the docks to your plate, fish caught by local fishermen rarely travel in a straight line.

Typically, local fishermen bring their catch to New Bedford, Gloucester or Boston to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. But there are instances when the fish stays local.

Brant Rock Fish Market owner Henry Dunbar said he attends the auctions to buy the best possible seafood to sell at his market.

"Most of the stuff I get is from dealers," Dunbar said. "Auctions can be quite expensive though."

Dunbar said when he has the opportunity, he'll buy fish from local fishermen who come in with their day's catch.

"You only see the local fishermen once in a while," he said. "That's a limited resource."

He said when he does buy fish locally, it's usually cod, lobster, flounder or striped bass. He reiterated, however, that most of his products are bought at the auctions.

Scott MacKinnon, who recently hung up his fishing gear to open a seafood restaurant and market in Marshfield, is very familiar with the drill local fishermen go through with their catch.

MacKinnon said many fishermen will load their fish onto a truck bound for New Bedford, Gloucester or Boston, referred to as "The Big Three" because the majority of the fishing business in the state is conducted in those cities.

If a fisherman chooses to truck his catch rather than bringing it to the auction his or herself, the fisherman would typically get 5-10 cents a pound for that particular catch. MacKinnon said he always preferred the auction route, because he said fishermen could lose money using the truck.

"The fish comes in and people bid on the quality," MacKinnon said of the auctions. "Each boat can set a different price."

MacKinnon said there are regular auctions in which the different kinds of fish and the quantity available are written on a blackboard for all to see. There are also display auctions in which people who are there to buy fish can actually see the product with their own eyes.

"Fishermen tend to like the display auctions a lot better," MacKinnon said, who recently opened Captain Mack's on Route 139 in Marshfield. "They like to take pride in their catch." He added those who come to the auctions to buy fish are from outlets such as supermarkets, local stores and other businesses.

MacKinnon said at the auctions, the prices of the fish are never set in stone. One day, a certain type of fish could be priced reasonably and the next day, it could be expensive.

"Supply and demand dictates the price," MacKinnon said. "It depends on how many fish there are on the floor and how many people are bidding on it. If no one needs a certain type of fish, it's going to be less expensive."

When the auction is over, dealers divide up the fish and it is sent to many different places within the state and beyond — grocery stores, restaurants, small markets and other outlets are all supplied once all the products at the auction are separated.

Marshfield lobsterman Laddie Dexter, who's been a fisherman since 1961, does not typically attend the seafood auctions. Rather, he brings his lobsters onto the docks and supplies stores in Marshfield, Scituate, Duxbury and others.

"Driving to Gloucester, Boston or New Bedford can take some time and you want to keep the lobsters fresh. If you don't sell them live, they're not worth anything."
Laddie Dexter

"Driving to Gloucester, Boston or New Bedford can take some time and you want to keep the lobsters fresh. If you don't sell them live, they're not worth anything."

Dexter said when he goes out fishing, there are days that he comes back with a mere 20 lobsters, but on rare occasions, he could come back with as much as 1,000 pounds of lobster.

Local business people from places like restaurants and markets all stress the importance of using fresh fish, and more importantly, local fish.

"If you want local fish, buy it at a local market," Dexter said.

Art D'Allessandro, the chef at Arthur and Pat's restaurant in Marshfield, said he is friends with a few of the local fishermen. Whenever one of them comes around selling fresh fish, he jumps on the chance to buy it. He also buys a lot of his seafood products at Brant Rock Fish Market.

"I try to use as many local products as I can," D'Allessandro said. "It helps to keep in touch with the local fishermen." He added a lot of cod and haddock comes from this area and he noted many of the lobsters he buys are from the Brant Rock Fish Market.

"I try to use as many local products as I can. It helps to keep in touch with the local fishermen."
Art D'Allessandro

Dexter is one of the local lobstermen who supplies Dunbar with lobsters.

"You have to support the area," D'Allessandro said. "You're not going to get a better product. It's right in our back yard and it's the best in the world. The bottom line is that it's important to support the locals."

Aside from local restaurants and small fish markets, big supermarket chains tend to use fish caught locally. Stop & Shop is one of them.

"We support local fisheries and we do buy local products," said Stop & Shop spokesperson Rob Keane. "We buy things out of areas like Marshfield and Scituate but also out of places like New Bedford and the Cape. The products we get from Marshfield and Scituate are really cod and lobsters."

"Local fish hasn't been frozen and that's the best part," MacKinnon added. "There's nothing like fresh seafood. And if you want fresh seafood, this is the area to be in."

together to keep them from fighting or injuring each other in the water tank they are stored in for the remainder of the trip.

Before returning the emptied trap to the back of the boat, Jeffrey fills the bait net with a new supply of herring — the most popular form of bait used in lobstering. The traps are lined-up at the back of the boat until the entire line is pulled. And like a well-oiled machine, the traps slide back into the ocean in the exact order they are pulled out — waiting for the next time they will be disturbed in a few days.

Inside the 20 traps on each line, fewer than 10 lobsters can legally be kept, Jeffrey explains. But at this time of year the duo isn't expecting to bring home a bountiful supply.

"We get the bulk of the stock in the fall," Patterson says, explaining that the lobsters seasonally migrate to warmer waters and are more plentiful in the fall. "We go out farther (from the shore) and get a lot more."

Net result of regulations

While lobstermen continue to enjoy success at sea, local fishermen who make their living bringing in cod, haddock and other ground fish have found it increasingly difficult to do so. Sweeping federal restrictions and tough competition has led to troubled waters for fishermen.

Cracking down on the fishing fleet as an attempt to replenish depleting cod and haddock stock in recent years, a federal judge in late April cut by 20 percent the maximum amount of days fishermen are allowed at sea. The average number of days spent at sea during the last five years by each fisherman is calculated and then reduced by 20 percent to determine the new total number of days allowed for this year.

"This is the least amount of activity I've seen in a long time," local fisherman Frank Mirarchi said. "Time is of the essence now that we have such a budgeted clock."

Mirarchi — a "drag fisherman" who has operated with a mobile net for 39 years — said he has had to downsize his staff and his methods this year. In fact, many fishermen have been left with no choice but to take on some part-time side jobs.

Catching more than 400 pounds each day of total fish, Mirarchi brings home anywhere from 50 cents per pound to $2 per pound from a fish processor in New Bedford

But Mirarchi is still making a career of the job he began in college as a way to make extra money. Like Patterson, Mirachi's day breaks early — by 5 a.m. He sets out to sea with his son Andrew for a long day traveling and dragging.

"It's a physically exhausting day," Mirarchi said of the often 16-hour days he spends fishing. "I'm tired at the end of the day — I've been doing this a long time."

Once Mirarchi's boat, "Christopher Andrew" reaches its destination — often more than an hour and 50 miles away — the 100-foot mobile net is dropped to the ocean floor and towed for more than an hour at 3 mph.

"We're pretty much hunting the fish," he says. "Once you learn where everything is on the ocean floor you know where to find them."

But with a limit of catching just 400 pounds of cod each day, Mirarchi must be careful at how good he gets at his job. After towing for more than an hour, Mirarchi said he usually brings up about 250 pounds of fish — but is still limited to the 400 pounds each day of cod.

"We've gone from wanting to catch these big tows to thinking — how can we avoid them?" he said.

Catching more than 400 pounds each day of total fish, Mirarchi brings home anywhere from 50 cents per pound to $2 per pound from a fish processor in New Bedford. After gutting the cod himself on the boat, Mirarchi's fish stock is picked up by the distributor and auctioned to various high-end markets.

"I can't run an efficient business with the way things are now," Mirarchi said, adding that most of the profits go to his son, Andrew who is not yet financially secure. "Everything else goes back into the boat — I hardly keep anything."

As an established fisherman who has seen plenty of successful years under his belt, Mirarchi is able to stay afloat for now.

STAFF PHOTOS/SUSAN HANEY

With the trap on the rail of the boat, lobsters are measured and if they're too small, or in some cases too big, they're thrown back into the ocean.

Herring is the fish of choice used by the Patterson's to bait their lobster traps.

Patterson, who also owns and operates a fishing boat has not taken advantage of that alternative this year because of the new regulations. And he doesn't know when he will again.

Countless other fishermen have switched to lobstering due to the restrictions, notes Scituate fisherman Bob MacKinnon. But eventually that too, will take its toll in the form of a depleted lobster supply locally, he said.

"This is OK for me now," Patterson says. "But who knows where everything will go in the next couple of years."

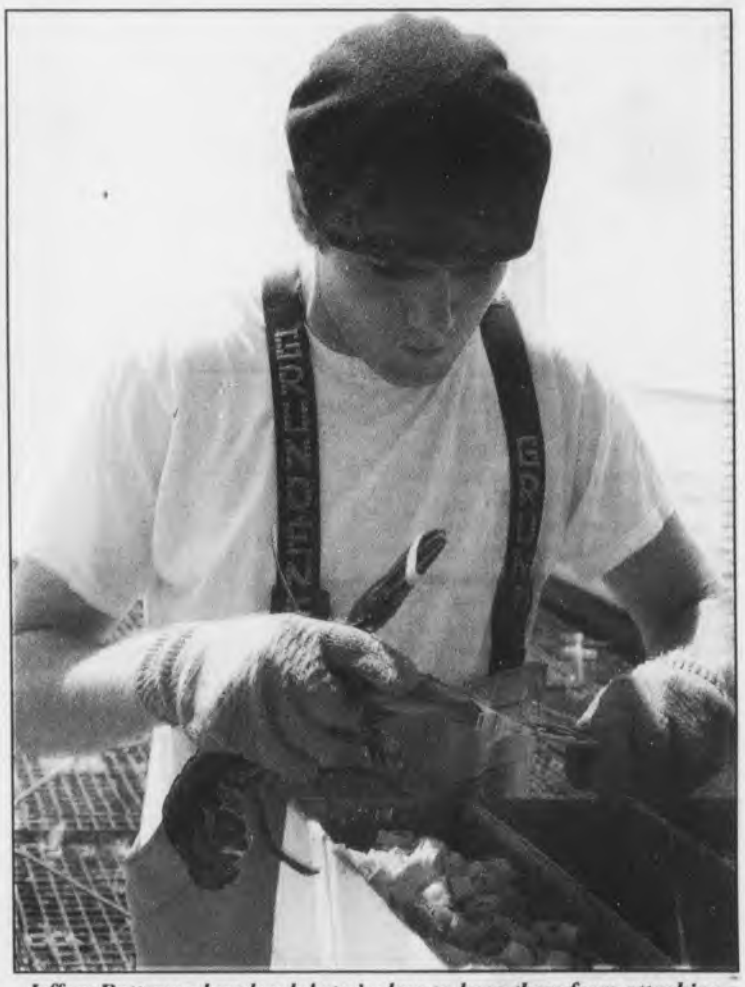
And although he may not be able to predict the future of his industry, Patterson can predict his paycheck. Taking in an average of 200 to 300 pounds of lobsters each day, he takes home $3 per pound for soft-shell lobsters that have recently shed their shell, and $4 per pound for the regular hard shell lobsters from a distributor in Humarock.

Today has been a good day for the season and Patterson will be home early.

He heads to Humarock to drop off the day's catch after docking "Jason James" for the day.

"We go out early so we can get in early," Patterson says as he pulls back into the dock around 3 p.m., waving at the lunch crowd at T.K. O'Malley's.

"It's not too bad — you get used to it."



Jeffrey Patterson bands a lobster's claw to keep them from attacking each other in the onboard seawater tank.

Starring in the movie "Blue Crush," is Kate Bosworth's the first lead for the up and coming actor.

The Cohasset 19-year-old plays the part of Anne Marie, who hopes to win the Pipleine, a top surfing competition at Oahu, Hawaii. To do so she must overcome several obstacles in her life. When surfing a previous time, she wiped out and nearly died when she hit her head on a coral reef, an experience that continues to haunt her. Neither parent is around, and Anne Marie lives with two friends who are co-workers as maids at an upscale hotel.In addition she is trying to do the best she can caring for her younger sister, a girl with an attitude who knows how to find trouble.

"It's about a girl with a dream. Hopefully it will inspire others to face their fears and live up to their dreams," Bosworth said.

Playing the role of Anne Marie, Kate Bosworth spent countless hours gearing up and preparing for the role.

Anne Marie's life gets more complicated when she falls for a professional quarterback, Matt (Matthew Davis) who comes to stay at the hotel for the Pro Bowl. "She comes to a fork in the road, she can live life as a millionaire, or she can live life here (Hawaii)," said Bosworth.

Local opposition to 40B builds

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The town's new anti-40B group is at a crossroads.

Interest is growing throughout the town as evidenced by the 40-plus person turnout for Monday night's meeting at town hall. But along with the added interest, comes added pressure.

On Sept. 16, the zoning board of appeals hearing on the proposed 254-unit Avalon Bay 40B development at 155 King St. begins. The group, now only three meetings old, must attempt to organize action against the development as well as Chapter 40B.

"We're going to put as many obstacles out there as we can."
Michael Westcott, 2 River Rd.

Under Chapter 40B, which was adopted in 1969, developers can skirt some of the town's zoning laws in exchange for providing 20-25 percent of the development as affordable housing.

Municipalities are vulnerable to comprehensive permits if they have less than the state-mandated 10 percent of their housing stock as affordable by state standards.

Cohasset only has 76 units of affordable housing. With 2,700 households overall, the town is well below the 10 percent threshold.

Previously, the town has faced two 40B projects, the 60-unit Crystal Woods that straddled the Cohasset-Scituate line near Ledgewood Drive and Deck Point, 119 King St., with 128 condos. Both were approved with conditions in 1989 and 1987 respectively, but were never built.

"We're going to put as many obstacles out there as we can," said meeting organizer Michael Westcott of 2 River Rd. "The law has forced us to do that at this point, we have no other choice."

And that means looking into

Early retirement exclusion challenged

School committee may ask selectmen to reconsider janitor's retirement

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Indications are that the school committee will ask the board of selectmen to reconsider their decision to exclude Group 1 employees from the state's "opt-in" early retirement legislation, Chapter 116.

According to town manager Mark Haddad, school committee chairman Richard Flynn approached him about whether or not it was possible for the school committee to make a further recommendation to the selectmen.

"The school committee may ask the board to reconsider based on their meeting this Thursday," said town manager Mark Haddad. "If the school committee asks the board of selectmen to reconsider, they will — it's just common courtesy to the school committee."

The school committee, board of selectmen and Cohasset Mariner received letters of complaint from Elizabeth Soule, sister of Kevin Soule, a custodian who would like to retire early. The decision not to allow any Group 1 employees access to the plan does not prohibit individuals from retiring in general.

The town, in accordance with Chapter 116, decided to limit the participation in the program to two Group 4 employees. The town has no

Friends, family say farewell to Paul 'PJ' Trendowicz

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If a life span could be measured in lives touched, then Paul "PJ" Tendowicz lived to be 100.

St. Anthony's Church was filled to overflowing Friday with friends and family members of the 18-year-old B.C. High graduate, who died following a tragic swimming accident earlier last week.

Even after the 90-minute service was over and the hearse had swept Paul's body away, dozens of his school classmates and teammates converged in a huddle in front of the church and hugged, or just stood and stared ahead, still in stunned disbelief over the loss of their friend.

Although there were plenty of tears, there was also joy during the funeral mass, which was indeed a celebration of Paul's young life.

"His life was so full in those 18 years," said the Rev. John J. Hanwell, rector at B.C. High. Paul's Bible (that contained prom boutonnieres pressed near his favorite passages), a family photo, his lacrosse jersey (#21), and a plaque awarded him for being the "unsung" hero on the lacrosse team were placed on his coffin as symbols of his love of life.

Fr. Hanwell used an unexpected power outage as a metaphor to help explain what so many were feeling.

"The TV and appliances go off, the computer freezes and worst of all the lights go out," he said. "We are plunged into darkness and for a while we feel lost, helpless and maybe even frightened.

"We want to know why it happened and we want to blame somebody," Fr. Hanwell said.

He explained a tragic, unexpected death is like a blackout.

"One minute the sun is shining on a warm, humid August day and the next, it is like a dark night without the Town to re-install gate at Sandy Beach

The town has decided to re-install a gate at the far end Sandy Beach parking lot in order to cut down on nighttime activity there. The entrance opened last year to improve traffic flow.

"I'm going to call the DPW tomorrow morning and have the gate re-installed and then we are going to try to figure out who is going to open and close it," said town manager Mark Haddad.

Douglas F. McNary of 39 Deep Run, contacted the town about the problem.

"I think the selectmen have reached an excellent compromise," said Haddad. "We'll close the parking lot at 11 p.m. and police will close the gate and then open it again at 5 a.m. or 6 a.m. in the morning."

The town will continue to investigate other options over the winter.

Voter registration

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting, or Election Day, may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote; if you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the State Primary Election (which will be held Tuesday, Sept. 17, 2002) is Wednesday, Aug. 28 from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's office.

Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before Aug. 28.

Bradley hours

State Representative Garrett Bradley, D–Hingham, will hold district office hours, Thursday Aug. 22, at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall — upstairs, 88 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 5– 6 p.m. If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with Bradley, call (617) 722-2120.

Absentee ballots available

Absentee ballots for the State Primary on Sept. 17, are now available at the Town Clerks office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Sept. 16, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Libertarian, or Massachusetts Green Party, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A voter must vote in the party that he is enrolled. However, unenrolled voters who pull a ballot at the State Primary DO NOT become enrolled members of that party and DO NOT need to complete a charge of enrollment card - they remain unenrolled. Voters enrolled in a political designation MAY NOT take a ballot at the State Primary.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Sept. 17, 2002 to be counted.

The town will be using the Accu-Vote optical scan system. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots an be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Schools to undergo re-accreditation process

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Every 10 years, the New England Association of Schools and Colleges visits public secondary schools in the region for the purpose of re-accreditation. This September, it's the middle-senior high school's turn.

From Sept. 29-Oct. 2, a visiting committee from the NEASC will be at the school, rating its performance in seven specific areas – mission and expectation, curriculum, instruction, assessment of student learning, leadership and organization, school-based resources for learning, and community-based resources for learning.

"I'm looking forward to it," said Mike Jones, principal of the Middle-Senior High School. "It always helps to have a fresh group of people come in here and tell us what they see, commend us where we do well, and tell us where we can make improvements."

Part of the reason Jones is excited is because of his confidence in the school.

"I think that we are in very good shape right now," said Jones. "We've been working on the self-study. We are meeting all the new standards that have been set by the commission on secondary education in the past couple of years, and our instructional program is well established."

Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey agreed with Jones' assessment.

"Without a question, it is a very, very involved process and we expect that the accreditation team will have a number of commendations," said Malvey.

Malvey expects some recommendations from the visiting team, and is ready to act.

"Invariably, they will also find areas where the school needs to be improved," said Malvey. "Certainly we stand ready to act."

The 12-month-long self-assessment is the first step of re-accreditation. The visiting committee, comprised of volunteer administrators and teachers from other districts, then rates the school and makes recommendations. The school will then report its progress on any needs identified by the visiting committee through a follow-up program.

Jones doesn't expect the presence of the visiting team to disrupt the school.

"We'll try and keep as normal a schedule as possible," said Jones. "There will be 15 people here on the visiting committee and they will be setting up an office in the school. They will be around a lot during the day, but we will try and conduct school normally."

A veteran of several re-accreditations, Jones is unworried by the recent changes in the process.

"We know what the criteria are," said Jones. "The standards have changed over the past five years and the process for accreditation has changed as well. There are a lot more interviews with teachers and parents. They shadow the students and attend some classes to see what is going on in the classroom."

Previously, accreditation relied on a long checklist of standards, but that has been replaced by a series of narrative reports.

"(The NEASC) spent a lot of time re-doing their standards and thinking about exactly what goes into making an outstanding secondary school," said Jones. "They have decided, and I think rightly so, that a detailed report is more accurate."

According to Jones, the ongoing construction efforts will not play a role in the evaluation, but the committee will most likely want updates as to the progress.

"Certainly if the construction project had not occurred, the facility would be below standard," said Jones. "They're probably going to commend us for the project and want to receive updates. The fact that construction is going on here will probably just create a little more busyness."

Jones expects the committee to be impressed with the schools' ability to set – and keep – high standards.

"I think we have done a very good job in making it clear what our expectations are for graduates," said Jones. "I think that we have been very willing to update our curriculum."

Sewer officials look into equipment failure

Lightning strikes cause problems

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Selectmen are skeptical that the recent problems with the sewers in North Cohasset — due to lightning strikes — have been resolved.

"It just seems highly coincidental to me that you could have 80 homes hit, it just seems like too high a number to me," said selectmen chairman Michael Sullivan.

"And not to have other things go wrong in their home. It wasn't like every home got hit, it was like 60 or 80 homes had this particular piece of equipment hit, which would tell me that there is something that is wrong with the system."

"The manufacturer has their own people in there who have installed these in many places around the country and we feel very confident that this will solve the problem."
- Sean Cunning of the sewer commission.

In late July, lightning strikes burned out approximately 80 control panels and affected more than 120 homes in the area. According to the manufacturer of the equipment, the reason for the burnout was inadequate grounding on the part of the individual houses.

While the national standard for homes requires a grounding rod to be buried in the earth, Cohasset and Massachusetts state code requires only that a residence be grounded to the water main. The town replaced the panels and grounded the houses at a cost of just under $180,000. The money came out of the sewer department.

"The manufacturer has their own people in there who have installed these in many places around the country and we feel very confident that this will solve the problem," said Sean Cunning of the sewer commission.

"We've taken every step that the manufacturer has asked us to do. If it fails again, then we have a warranty issue. We've done everything we needed to do to satisfy the manufacturer."

Sullivan feels that it is time for an outsider to take a look at the viability of the system.

"I think they should have somebody looking into it.," said Sullivan. "Something doesn't make sense."

Cunning said the department is "90 percent sure" that the repairs will fix the problem, but is prepared to take all options, from the warranty, to the $1.16 million maintenance bond from the company, Interon.

"We have enough money in that maintenance bond to cover replacing every pump and control panel in all of North Cohasset," said Cunning.

The town is currently investigating whether the panel replacement is covered under town insurance.

"What we are doing, is investigating all of our options," said town manager Mark Haddad.

Cunning noted that to his knowledge there have been no other complaints since the panels have been replaced. The town has almost finished grounding the 120 homes affected.

"All the incidents that happened, besides having a Rosano-Davis truck come up and pump down their system, it was pretty invisible to most of the homeowners," said Cunning.

Art barn takes center stage

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

When the 225 students attending the Montessori Community School return from summer vacation, they may not recognize their old school.

Many classrooms will have a new look and some new faces will be different. But when the students pull up to the entrance off Route 123 they'll see something that was never there before — a new addition to the school — an art barn.

The Meehan Family Art Barn, built over the summer at the school is set for a grand opening Sept. 13 — showcasing what Head of School Donna Milani Luther said has been the most anticipated day since plans began three years ago.

"This is going to be a place for the children," Luther said. "They will make everything and design everything themselves — it will truly be their space."

The $1.2 million barn-like building — largely funded by parent and alumni donations — will house all student performances, a morning sing for all the classes once a week, various poetry readings, shows the students will choreograph themselves and a space for physical activities.

But Luther said the best part about the barn will be that it will belong to the students. Luther, along with Keith Moskow — a former parent of a Montessori student and the architect for the project — designed platform-like spaces within the barn for students to build on. Luther envisions that student's artwork or creative projects will be displayed on these platforms throughout the year.

"The focus on everything in the Montessori School is that the children do things for themselves," she said. "And this will be a place for them to really become creative in."

The 6,000 square-foot building comes just in time for the school's 30th anniversary year, and in time to satisfy the school's growing need for an arts center.

Prior to the new barn, Montessori students would have to travel to Norwell to use facilities for performance shows. But now students will have access to a new music room, art room, an open stage and a studio area for lighting and sound control.

"We're using a lot of bright colors with a lot of window space," Luther said. "It's what really sets the building apart — it's so impressive."

But Luther said the main idea behind the barn was to give the students a place to be themselves — on stage. Students will have the opportunity to not only perform for their peers during annual shows, but at other various times during the year by reading original poetry or showcasing some artistic or musical talent, Luther said.

"We want children to feel like they don't have to be afraid," she said. "That's what we focus on in every aspect of the school — and now here especially."

The Montessori school — which draws students from nearby South Shore towns such as Scituate, Cohasset, Hanover and Norwell — originated in Italy during the first part of the 20th century, and came to the United States in the 1960s. Teaching children ranging from 15 months old to the 8th grade, Montessori has become the popular alternative to mainstream teaching.

Luther said the curriculum begins with toddlers — teaching them to do things for themselves or cooperatively —shelves, tables and chairs are at their own height and students participate in age-appropriate activities. This first developmental sequence teaches muscle development and coordination through independent activities and responsibility, Director of Communications Liz Knox said.

"We really try to focus on learning through discovery at all the ages," she said. "Children learn at different rates, and we want them to feel comfortable doing that."

Through each of the four levels — Toddler, Elementary One, Elementary Two and Middle School — the students are taught the same curriculum as a public or private mainstream school, but with a different approach, Luther said. And with the responsible, mature environment Luther said the Montessori School creates each year, she believes students have more respect for themselves and their peers when they reach high school and are better prepared.

"Throughout the learning process, students are always at a different place than their friend or classmate," Luther said. "But here children are taught to respect that difference and focus more on where they are and how they can control where they are going."

Luther said The Meehan Family Art Barn will supplement that teaching method perfectly. The barn will create an open environment for the students to freely express themselves, without fear of judgment or failure. And although that feeling exists throughout the school, the art barn will open the door to new territory by allowing students to flaunt their artistic talents that may have been hidden in other environments, she said.

Brown says curbside recycling shouldn't be trashed

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The expression "easier said than done" would have been written about recycling the trash picked up by private haulers in town.

While even the haulers agree that recycling is desirable and important — their ability to handle recyclable material could be problematic. Also, the town's capability to measure compliance with a set of proposed "rules and regulations" is in question.

About 400 of the town's 2700 households don't use the Recycling Transfer Facility, dubbed the RTF, but hire private companies to remove their trash, which goes out of town.

The town's Pay-As-You-Throw program at the RTF that was adopted a year ago has encouraged residents to recycle more because they must pay for trash bags for what they don't recycle. But those who don't use the RTF aren't necessarily recycling.

So, after raising the issue earlier this summer, selectmen invited the Board of Health and the private haulers to a recent meeting.

If it were up to Selectman Merle Brown, who also sits on the Recycling Committee and is passionate about recycling, there'd be no issue.

"Recycling helps us with a grant program and also, recycling is something everybody should be doing," said Brown, who suggested a six-month trial period for the regulations. Residents, who go to the RTF, recycle close to 40 percent of their trash. Brown said a 20 percent goal for private haulers is doable for the first year until the program got off the ground.

But Joe Laugelle, who is one of about six private haulers in town, said it's not that easy. He explained that it is difficult to get customers to comply and recycling is labor-intensive. In fact, he said if the new regulations were enforced it could put some haulers out of business.

If selectmen approve the new regulations, what's at stake for the haulers is the potential of losing their license to collect refuse in town if they don't recycle.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan worried that it would be impossible to monitor everyone fairly.

The proposed regulations state the licensee would have to submit the tonnage of recyclables collected every three months to selectmen along with a customer list indicating any new additions or loss of customers.

Rob Schwandt of Graham Waste, said some customers who use a private company don't want the hassle of recycling. He asked what the hauler was supposed to do at the curbside if the customer didn't recycle.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said everyone is in agreement about the importance of recycling.

"But you're taking someone's license away because another individual does not recycle," she said to Brown.

John McNabb, a member of the Recycling Committee, said mandatory recycling is really voluntary because it depends on the cooperation of citizens. He suggested adopting the state's policy of making sure everyone has access to recycling.

"We'd be just better off if we required all haulers do is provide recycling for customers who request it," he said. But McNabb noted the customers who recycle should not be charged more to do so.

Selectmen decided to table the discussion and have Town Manager Mark Haddad schedule the issue again for a future meeting after a few of the kinks are worked out of the proposed rules.

Scaring up some fun

Cohasset boat Ghost travels to Antique Boat Festival

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Jim Watson, proprietor of Cohasset Hardware Company, is in his element.

But the mustachioed purveyor of all things hardware in Cohasset Village isn't talking about tools, he's talking about boats.

The backroom of his hardware store is lined with well-worn pictures of boats and friends, friends and boats – the two are inextricably entwined in Watson's world – and each photograph is marked by fingerprints and creased edges. Much like a proud father, Watson is quick to offer them to visitors. He punctuates each story with a smile and a barrage of superlatives, pointing at the photos for emphasis.

"I became interested in boats when I was about 14-years-old," said Watson. "We had a couple of Lymans, which are old speed boats, wooden power boats. We were looking to buy a boat and a friend of his had a boat that was built up in Southwest Harbor, Maine, so he steered us away from production boats to custom boats."

This weekend, Watson's current boat, Ghost, a 40-foot, lobster-style hull cruiser, will be on display in Salem at the 20th Annual Boston Antique and Classic Boat festival.

The festival was founded in the early 1980s as a way to educate residents of Boston about their maritime history. This year, 40 boats will converge upon Hawthorne Cove Marina, ranging from a small 19th century canoe to 60-foot schooners. Regardless of size, all the boats in attendance have a story.

"The boat, if you will, has pedigree," said Watson of Ghost. "It was designed by this guy Will Frost, who lived in Beals Island, Maine in the 1930s. He was sort of the grandfather of all the designers there. His grandson is a guy named Carroll Lowell, a famous designer, as well."

It was built in 1934 to serve as a ferry between Islesboro, Maine and the mainland, and was commissioned during World War II for service patrolling the East Coast. Now, it's Watson's baby, living out its later years as a joy ride.

"I'm a big fan of the design and look of them, more than anything," said Watson, who owned another 40-foot lobster-hull boat, the Helen McInnes prior to Ghost. "Most of the boats I see today you couldn't give me. These Grady Whites and all these boats just don't do it for me. These new designs, nah, I guess I just like old stuff."

Old stuff, according to Watson's, that may yet make a return.

"Lobster-style hulls, are now making a big comeback.," said Watson. "Henry Hinckley's building them. Picnic boats they are calling them, and they are $500,000. They're all rigged out, but they're basically reproductions of these old designs."

Beyond lineage, Ghost, is a prime example of what draws Watson to antique vessels.

"The thing I like about this boat is that it's simple – single engine, one intake, very simple," said Watson. "The new boats are all complicated with through-hull fittings and generators and wires and this stuff is just so basic, its a throwback.."

They're all throwbacks at the festival, which runs Saturday Aug. 24 from 12-5 p.m. and Sunday Aug. 25 from 11 a.m.-3 p.m.

"I used to take the big boat to (the festival), the Helen McInnes," said Watson. "It's just a good time. People show up from everywhere with these vintage boats and it's a lot of fun. They used to have it in Boston, and then it went to Marina Bay and now it's up in Salem. So it's just a good weekend of fun. These two gals have kept this thing going and it gets bigger every year."

Those two gals are Pat Wells and Ann Campbell.

"We founded the festival to celebrate our maritime heritage and bring people back to the harbor," said Wells. "We wanted to do something on the water as opposed to having a jazz concert or a rock concert on land. It's a more intimate experience. You get to meet skippers and crew and some boat owners will invite the team aboard for the below deck tour. Some owners will have period decor, such as period place settings."

And all for a $5 donation. Children under 12-years-old are free.

"It is a family event and some of the boat owners have children," said Wells. "I think that the children who come to the event are just fascinated to meet the children on the boat. There is a boat that came last year and is coming this year again, Old Glory. It's a cruiser but it has masts, and the daughter Tiffany was perched up on one of the masts reading a book, which really fascinated the children who came to the festival."

The festival has been a success despite its travels.

"We went through about three non-profits, and then we went out on our own," said Campbell. "Now we are a part of Lowell's Boat Shop, which has been making boats since 1793, and is a part of the Newburyport Maritime Society. Mostly what it is, is a chance for people to realize what gorgeous craft we have around here."

Watson agrees and quickly points out that the festival highlights the nautical history of the area, a history that is particularly alive in Cohasset Harbor.

"I look at some of the boats in the harbor now, specifically the Janice Marie, by Paul Figueiredo's uncle Donald and grandfather Louis," said Watson. "Another special boat in the harbor is the Ida Jean built by Bill Stone and Charlie Butman. The boats are over 40-years-old and their design has stood the test of time."

For Campell, the festival is a chance to honor this tradition.

"It's lovely, it's floating art," said Campbell. "It celebrates the boats, it celebrates the owners who are maintaining these boats so we can get to see them again. Boats are really a hole in the water into which you pour money. We are awfully glad for these groups of owners."

Watson's motivating factor is simple – it's just plain fun.

"People say, 'Oh geez, a boat's a lot of work,'" said Watson. "Well, not if you are up there enjoying the time. It's great, it's fun, I enjoy it a lot."

Ghost* is anchored in Cohasset Harbor.

Symphony at Abbey

The Hingham Symphony Orchestra meets the blues in its third annual outdoor summer concert at Glastonbury Abbey on Saturday, Aug. 24 at 4:30 p.m. Members of the Hingham Symphony Chamber Players play their version of American classics alongside Norman Zamchek and Suzy Williams, known as Stormin Norman and Suzy, a singing/songwriting/piano playing collaboration with roots in blues, jazz, boogie-woogie and vaudeville.

Originally based in Boston, pianist Zamcheck and chanteuse Williams have played together for a quarter century, from major New York nightspots, to off-Broadway theater, network TV, and Carnegie Hall. Suzy◊s rich, timeless voice has been compared to Bessie Smith, Sophie Tucker and Billie Holiday, all of whom appear in her repertoire. She is complemented by Norman's rhythmic, barrel-house/blues based piano. Together they cover classics from the American songbook, and draw on a catalogue of more than 300 original songs.

Audience members should bring a lawn chair or blanket, and a picnic if they like. Snacks and beverages will be available for purchase. Waterfield Group unveils Village design

Selectmen review preliminary report

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Waterfield Design Group made a preliminary design report on the Downtown Revitalization project to the selectmen on Tuesday.

The meeting addressed the project in broad terms, from the scope of the design and the materials used, to construction staging options.

"The design process, which is what we are in right now, is a lot like trying to focus a camera," said Craig R. Miller, president of the Waterfield Design Group.

"You don't finally get the whole picture into focus until you do a lot of back and forth. Tonight's meeting was really to start the back and forth. What do you like? Here are some ideas and suggestions. So that is what we are trying to do, to create the dialogue that is needed to focus the project and the public meetings in the future will be a part of that process."

Town manager Mark Haddad was impressed with the company's report.

"I'm very excited about them," said Haddad. "I like their commitment to the project, Craig (Miller) has just been a real asset, I love working with Karen (Fitzgerald) and John (Cavanaro). Having John Cavanaro a part of the project, being a local resident, really adds to it as well. And Karen and Craig bringing a fresh set of eyes to the process from the Waterfield Group has been phenomenal."

Miller was equally pleased.

"It was a very productive meeting," said Miller. "Nothing has been set in stone yet as to what direction the project would go, big, medium, or small. We're just trying to look at all the different alternatives."

Selectmen chairman Michael Sullivan gave some insight as to the town's intended direction.

'Well, I want it to be done correctly, but I don't think that people's appetites for a big expensive project are there right now," said Sullivan.

> "The design process, which is what we are in right now, is a lot like trying to focus a camera."
> Craig R. Miller, president of the Waterfield Design Group.

"When you talk about burying the electric wires, I think we need to know, if we just do it in the village, what's that going to cost and then we can do cost estimates from there and people can figure out what they are going to be comfortable with."

The group came in with rough, preliminary estimates of figures for the projects. Miller emphasized that these figures are subject to, and most likely, will change as the project comes into focus.

- $1.6 million for a streetscape project that would revitalize the Village area
- $1.4 million to put all the electrical wires underground
- $1 million for James Brook culvert
- $166,000 for the St. Stephen sidewalk
- $38,220 to install a new water main down South Main Street

"Those figures are pie-in-the-sky, everything under the sun numbers," said Haddad. "It is important that the public know that the chairman of the selectmen, Michael Sullivan, stepped in and said, 'Whoa, we need to do this in a scope that we can afford.'"

Presently, there is an approximately $1.6 million deficit that Haddad pointed out was just about the cost of putting the electrical wires underground. That project could be cut back, or even eliminated, though Miller was in favor of at least putting some of the wires underground. All of the other project costs can be cut back in terms of scope and materials used to better fit the town's budget.

All of these issues will be discussed in a public hearing in September. That hearing date will be set in the coming weeks.

The board of selectmen and Waterfield Group will hold another meeting for town officials on September 4 at 6 p.m. in preparation for that public hearing.

The board also voted to approve, in concept, a plan to expand the rear parking lot design near the future MBTA station. The MBTA was going to have to buy property from ABB Optical in order to build the parking lot, but ABB wants to expand their business.

With the board's consent, Waterfield can now enter negotiations with the MBTA to expand the parking lot on town land at the MBTA's expense in order to avoid having to buy the ABB land. The area is made up of mostly ledge. The original parking lot plan had also undercounted the amount of parking spaces available.

OPINION

A TRIBUTE

A good friend to all

By David Ingber

The following tribute remembers the life of PJ Trendowicz. The writer will be a senior at Cohasset High in the fall and has been a sports correspondent for the Mariner for three years.

It has now been nine days since the tragic death of Paul Jacob Trendowicz, giving family and friends some time for the news to sink in. Yet an overwhelming feeling of disbelief still hangs over Cohasset. How can we explain, even acknowledge, the loss of one so full of life as PJ?

The outpouring of support the Trendowicz family received was a perfect tribute to Paul. Hundreds of sobbing friends congregated at Cunningham Bridge last Wednesday for a late-night vigil. The wake on Thursday had friends lined up out the door of St. Anthony's Parish Hall for six hours. Mourners filled the church 30 minutes before the Friday morning funeral service.

But no one can quite explain how they feel. Tragic losses like this often give rise to overused clichés such as, "It could not have happened to a less deserving kid." But in Paul's case, it is truth. He was a good and decent person, friendly, intelligent and talented in many different areas.

Paul was a brother. Dan, who will enter the eighth grade this fall at Cohasset Middle School, has always looked up to PJ, trying to emulate his athletic moves, his cooking ability, his quick wit. PJ in turn devoted himself to coaching Dan's lacrosse and baseball teams. But more than that, much more than that, big brother PJ integrated Dan into his social life, and PJ's close friends now have taken Dan into the fold as they, and we, all grieve Paul's passing.

Paul was a musician. He could listen to a song on the radio and play it by ear on his red Stratocaster within six months of starting guitar lessons. He wowed us all when he nailed Nirvana's "About a Girl" at the sixth grade promotion exercises. His collection of CDs was extensive (featuring, of course, every album of Bob Marley and Nirvana), but more impressive was his natural sense of music. This became clear when we sat down for our occasional blues jam sessions. Although he never studied musical theory, Paul blew me away with his innate feel for what sounded good.

Paul was an athlete. By seventh grade, Paul was head and shoulders above anyone else (athletically and figuratively). Although tall for his age, he was never awkward. He had the grace and athleticism of a point guard but he could post-up better than any center around. Paul excelled at every sport he played, trying his hand, for example, at soccer and tennis.

Eventually, he decided to concentrate on lacrosse, where he was an acknowledged success. A speedy attacker with great instincts, Paul was the senior captain of his varsity BC High team. He won the "Unsung Hero" award on the team for his quiet leadership on and off the field. In recognition and tribute, the high school retired Paul's number 21 jersey.

Paul was a friend. Trendo knew everyone and everyone knew him. No matter where he was or who he was with or what he was doing, he would take the time for a friendly greeting to any passerby he knew. He had that rare good nature not merely to get along with different types, but to be friends with them. Paul was a popular student, but never limited himself to just one crowd. Students who enter private school often forget their former classmates, and in turn are forgotten. Not Paul.

PJ maintained each of his many friendships in Cohasset while enjoying a network of friends at BC High. The proof — equal and large numbers of Cohasset High and BC High teens came to pay their respects. His Notre Dame Academy friends were well represented by the a capella choir, which sang "We are one body" at the service in Paul's memory. PJ was loved by everyone who knew him.

I am one of so many who treasured his friendship. He spent hours patiently teaching me the art of the lacrosse shot well after my lack of ability was established. We played one-on-one basketball, and he would let me score a lay-up every now and then, even though he could easily block every shot I took. Even though I started playing guitar a year and a half after him, PJ always showed me the most recent songs he learned so that we could jam together. In many of our post-tennis class hangouts, he guided me in the art of the frappe, knowing exactly how much milk and how much chocolate chip ice cream was needed. (And of course he'd let me have the first glass. Classic Paul.)

For several years, I went to school with kids a year older than myself. It was a challenging time. In the third grade, this new boy from New Jersey not only easily and quickly made friends but went out of his way to include me and look out for his little buddy. So many people have similar stories about PJ. That was just the sort of person he was — helpful, kind, and genuinely pleasant to be around.

We will miss his shining personality and ready smile. We will miss his downtown cruises with reggae music blasting out of his trademark Lincoln Navigator. We will miss his Halloween parties, his fruit snacks, his boat rides, his sense of humor, his love of life.

We will miss P.J.

Framing Swift

Acting Gov. Jane Swift will have performed the duties of governor for 20 months when she steps down in January. Unlike most governors, she did not earn the position through the ballot box. She's in the corner office at the State House only because her former boss - then governor Paul Cellucci - jumped ship midway through his four-year term.

Her photograph, however, will be displayed at the State House right alongside those of all previously elected governors - a decision made recently by the State Art Commission.

We agree that Swift's photograph should be displayed, though not because she was the state's first female governor - the reason given by the commission for its decision. Her photograph belongs on that wall for the sake of continuity.

Almost two years is a long time for a state to go without a governor, and recent history quickly becomes ancient history in this fast moving world. A gap of 20 months needs an explainer, and that's exactly what the nameplate beneath her photograph should do - clearly explain that Swift was 'acting' governor in 2001 and 2002.

Swift's personal story will be an interesting one for students of political history, and her photograph in the gallery of governors will be an ideal stepping off point for those stories. Despite her less than stellar performance, Swift can be admired for her commitment to the job and tenacity to see it through to the end under the worst of conditions.

She was 36 years old with a toddler at home and was seven months pregnant with twins when Cellucci announced his decision to become U.S. Ambassador to Canada. She could have walked away. There are those who say she should have resigned and left the daunting job of governance to someone more experienced.

That, however, would have been political suicide for her and for the ailing Republican party, which has held the corner office for more than 10 years. Her resignation would have given the power of that office to a Democrat. If she had any doubts she could do the job, she hid them well, and gave it a gallant try. For that, she should be congratulated, at least by her Republican peers and voting members of that party.

So let's give Swift her do. Though only an acting governor, she made the state of Massachusetts the focal point of her life for almost two years. A portrait - at no expense to the state, by the way - is deserved and will also serve a practical purpose.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

No trespassing

TO THE EDITOR:

In last week's Mariner, our cartoonist, Mr. Hamilton, took a swipe at the "No Trespassing" signs sprouting like mushrooms on the north side of Sandy Beach.

Someone once remarked, "It takes 24 hours to become a Californian but three generations minimum to become a New Englander." The new owners of the beautiful home at the north end of Sandy Beach in Cohasset are just beginning their long socialization process. At some point – certainly within three generations – they will voluntarily remove those ugly "No Trespassing" signs now defacing the otherwise stunning rocky seascape of our town's beach.

In the meantime, might we not show a little compassion for these newcomers, who are obviously struggling to adjust to the ways of our town? I thought Mr. Hamilton's cartoon a bit harsh. It likely hardened the attitude of our new neighbors, and will probably delay rather than hasten the restoration of our beautiful rocky seascape.

Coaches deserve credit

TO THE EDITOR:

I want to thank you and Mike Spellman for the story that appeared in last week's Mariner concerning the victory by our 12-year-old All Stars in the District Eight Championship game.

I would, however, like to point out that while it has been my pleasure to coach these stars in some capacity since they were seven years old, the credit for guiding this year's championships belongs entirely to head coach Bill Grimm and first assistant coach Bob Morgan. Like so many other Little League volunteers, both of these men have given tirelessly of their time and baseball knowledge over the course of many years. While it was the boys who know the games on the field, I think all involved would agree that a lot of credit for this championship season should be given to Coach Grimm and Coach Morgan.

Healthcare takes center stage

STATHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Aug. 16.

After covering politics for a while, one notices that the people who wage campaigns and the people who vote in them tend to have much different views of what's important.

Voters and casual observers feel what's important about an election is, roughly in order, issues, candidates, money and organization. The pros generally feel it's the exact opposite. They feel the determinants are, again in order, organization, money, candidate and issues. These feelings are indeed rough and general, not absolute, precise or universal.

This goes for the media, too. Reporters feel obliged to stay right on top of what the next strategy or tactical move of the campaigns will be. Therefore, news columns and air minutes are skewed away from explaining issues and comparing the candidates' proposals on them. Campaigns tend to get covered as being more about the candidates than the voters. Readers and voters get more information than they need or want about fundraising, internal strategy conflicts, staffing issues and advertising decisions.

Last week, though, the top of the voters' priority list — substance of the issues — seemed more prominent. There were the usual inside baseball developments — Mitt Romney's raising money faster than anyone ever has before, and Shannon O'Brien used to work at a health care company that went bankrupt (the fine print: she appears to have had nothing to do with creating its troubles). But a comparison of ideas about healthcare itself, and its costs, got an unusual amount of attention last week. The specifics:

Democrat Shannon O'Brien said as governor she would form a council to address a racial gap in healthcare that leaves black newborns dying at three times the rate of white newborns; pass a program to encourage doctors to prescribe the least expensive medications available; deliver more medication and treatment at lower cost through community health centers; and get all state hospitals to computerize their drug-administration operations to reduce medical errors. O'Brien said better management in the industry could lower costs, but her opponents said she didn't offer enough details.

Her Democrat opponent, Robert Reich, on Aug. 12 put forward his own plan, the centerpiece of which was allowing members of the public without health insurance to join the group insurance plan for state employees. Reich also proposed allowing the uninsured to buy medication at the same rate charged Medicaid recipients, and screening elders entering nursing homes to see if they can use home care instead.

The two initiatives announced last week join alternatives offered by other candidates in recent weeks.

Warren Tolaman, a Democrat, wants to go to a "single payer" system where there would be just one government-controlled health insurer.

Republican Romney proposes charging sliding fees for Medicaid health care, restructuring the agencies that oversee the healthcare networks, and reforming the medical malpractice system.

Senate President Thomas Birmingham, a Democrat, emphasizes work he's already done, such as the patients' bill of rights and raising the cigarette tax to preserve the state's program to help senior citizens buy prescription drugs.

Other than the campaign developments, the major news on the week continued to be fiscal fallout. The Swift administration is not exactly rushing to inform the public of service cuts but the news is leaking out.

• Officials at the Department of Youth Services said a $6.4 million budget cut would force them to release 130 young criminals from detention centers. But after the story broke last week, Acting Gov. Swift said she wouldn't allow the release. She said the administration had already put the $6.4 million in another spending bill and expected it to pass soon – a fact the DYS hadn't told reporters. Swift said the funds needed to be passed by the end of the week to stop the early releases, but the House didn't pass the deficiency budget, leaving the issue in limbo for the weekend.

• Another $6.5 million could mean the end of health education in most local school districts that rely on state aid to run the programs, officials told the News Service. Those who work with teens worry about a rise in sexually transmitted disease and date rape. "It's up to local districts to decide if they can maintain them on their own," state education department spokeswoman Heidi Perlman said. "It's a difficult time and something had to be cut. It's unfortunate because these are some spectacular programs."

• A program that gave $150 to $450 in monthly food stamps to families headed by legal aliens was funded for only a month. Those families will not get food stamps after this month, the welfare department said. Advocates perceived another strike against Massachusetts immigrants last week: the Supreme Judicial Court ruled constitutional a law requiring them to live here for six months before receiving state benefits.

• Responding to criticism of her veto of a bill intended to spur construction of more affordable housing units, Swift filed emergency regulations that seek to accomplish the goals of the legislation she nixed. The new rules empower the Office of Housing and Community Development to exempt communities from having to accept big new construction projects if they demonstrate progress in planning affordable units into the growth of their communities. Many communities are concerned about the number of new projects they have to accept. Current law says the developments must be allowed if less than 10 percent of the housing stock in a city or town is within reach of a low or moderate income wage earner. The vast majority of cities and towns have not attained that goal.

• The largest oil company in the US, Exxon, Mobil, also sells a lot of sundries, snack foods and tobacco at its convenience stores, and the tobacco sales – to minors – caught the eye of Mass. Attorney General Thomas Reilly. In Massachusetts, 577 stores operate under the Exxon or Mobil brand. He pressed the company to do a better job keeping cigars and cigarettes out of the hands and lungs of minors. The company agreed to improve training for clerks on checking IDs and blocking underage sales, and monitor compliance with video cameras and random checks by an outside company.

Craig Sandler writes for the State House News Service.

When millionaires strike billionaires

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, they're at it again. For the ninth time in 30 years, the millionaires and billionaires who have been entrusted with the best in baseball, the so-called National Pastime, are about the throw the whole thing into the dumper in the interest of making more money.

The players (the millionaires) have set a strike date of Aug. 30 if the owners (the billionaires) don't withdraw their proposal to tax the teams that have and give the money to the teams that don't have so that the don't haves will be able to compete with the haves.

This, say the millionaires, would reduce their salary increases and eventually act as a salary cap, which, say the billionaires, wouldn't be necessary if millionaires like Jason Giambi would resist the $10,428,571 waved at him voluntarily by that (expletive deleted) George Steinbrenner and his New York Yankees.

A lot of people trace this dispute between the money changers back to 1975 when a ruling by an arbitrator named Peter M. Seitz (who will never be elected to the Hall of Fame but should) ruled that the reserve system was dead and freed Andy Messersmith from then grasp of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Myself, I think the roots of the dispute go all the way back to 1858 when the sponsor of an amateur team from New York discovered that people (later known as fans) would pay 50-cents a head to enter the Fashion Race Course in Queens to watch his team play another amateur club from Brooklyn.

A few years later what was billed as the world's championship series was played in Philadelphia and 8,000 people showed up at 25-cents a head for the first game. Extra tickets were scalped for $5 apiece. The next game, the tickets were $1 apiece at the gate. This when the average pay of a working stiff was $1.25 a day. How long do you suppose it was before the first player (not yet a millionaire) watched the promoter count the receipts and said: "Hey, I did the work for that. Gimme some."

When the Cincinnati Red Stockings admitted they were fielding an all professional team in 1869, its shortstop, George Wright (for whom the golf course in Boston is named), was the highest paid player at $1,400 a year. The team won 57 games and lost none — and actually showed a profit of $1.39.

William Hulbert, the founder of the National League in 1876, spoke for most of the owners when he said: "It is ridiculous to pay ball players $2,000 a year, especially when $800 boys often do just as well." No, Jeremy Jacobs was not in the league at the time.

Players of that day got raises only when absolutely necessary. When the Federal League threatened to raid the established leagues in 1914, Hall of Famer Ty Cobb went from $12,000 to $20,000 a year. When the threat had passed in 1917, Hall of Famer Honus Wagner went from $10,000 to $5,700 a year.

"The sordid element of baseball as a business has cut a shadow over the sport," said the Literary Digest of May 29, 1915. Players make too much money, "parading about in their automobiles like princes, posing at the cabarets and trotteries (?) as little tin gods."

The Literary Digest went out of business after its poll predicted a certain win by Alf Landon in the presidential election of 1936. The Digest had conducted its poll by telephone. It didn't realize that the folks who voted for Franklin D. Roosevelt couldn't afford a phone.

Drought worsens, watch level ordered for South Shore

The Massachusetts Drought Management Task Force, at its Aug. 13 meeting at the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency Headquarters in Framingham, recommended that the drought designation for the Southeast and Cape Cod/Islands regions of the state be increased to watch level. The other regions of Massachusetts remain at drought advisory level.

July and August precipitation in Massachusetts has been far below normal. Precipitation totals for the month of July averaged only 51 percent of normal. The Southeast and Cape Cod regions have received less than half an inch of rain so far during August, with the Cape receiving less than 20 percent of normal.

Although the state's rainfall improved steadily between March and June 2002, the lack of precipitation during July and August has caused surface water and groundwater conditions to deteriorate. Fire danger levels in the drought watch areas are very high, and forest fires have developed, including a large fire in Plymouth. Soil moisture is low in the coastal areas of Massachusetts and is causing difficulties in extinguishing fires. The National Weather Service is forecasting drier than normal conditions for New England through November, 2002, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is predicting that drought conditions are likely to develop in the region over this period.

Water supply reservoirs throughout most of Massachusetts generally appear to be at levels that are able to meet current demands. The Quabbin Reservoir, operated by the Metropolitan District Commission, is 83-percent full, remaining in the below-normal system status. However, due to its large storage capacity, the system can withstand extended dry periods without affecting its ability to supply water.

Water suppliers on the Cape and Islands and in Southeastern Massachusetts are being affected by the extreme dry conditions and some are struggling to meet water demands.

Additional public water suppliers have imposed water use restriction in the past month, mostly in the Southeast region of the state. It is expected that the voluntary and mandatory use of water conservation measures will increase until significant precipitation occurs to replenish water supplies.

Stream flows were at below-normal levels across most of the state during July, and are continuing to decline. Groundwater levels were primarily in the normal range in Massachusetts during July, but Cape Cod and the Islands, and most of the Southeast region are experiencing below-normal water table levels. The groundwater levels continue to decline statewide and areas of below-normal groundwater levels are expected to expand as a result of the below-normal rainfall.

A drought advisory was initially issued for the entire state in December, 2001, following significantly below-normal levels of precipitation last fall. The entire state was raised to a drought watch in early March. In early June, because of the above-normal precipitation in May and early June, the state was reduced to a drought advisory level. In July, the drought advisory was continued for the entire state.

The drought watch level now in place for the Southeast and Cape Cod and Islands indicates a level of dry conditions that warrant intensified monitoring by state, federal and local agencies. The watch level is the third of five action levels related to drought conditions that are outlined in the Massachusetts Drought Management Plan.

The five action levels of the Drought Management Plan are: Normal, Advisory, Watch, Warning and Emergency. The Department of Environmental Protection will work with communities and provide technical assistance to assure that water supply needs can be met.

The National Weather Service forecasts above-normal temperatures and below-normal precipitation to continue through the month of August. Weather conditions are not currently favorable for tropical storm development. Below-normal precipitation is expected to continue through September and October. The Drought Management Task Force will continue to monitor conditions in the coming weeks to assess drought impacts. The task force assesses conditions across the state, coordinates dissemination of information to the public, and helps state, federal and local agencies coordinate any responses that may be needed.

Fire danger is a significant concern for the Southeast and Cape Cod and Islands regions of Massachusetts. In addition to being drier than normal, the current heat wave is causing increased fire danger levels, particularly in the coastal regions of the state. Also, the availability of surface water resources to extinguish fires is decreasing.

Public water supplies must be conserved for fire suppression and public safety. Forest fires have occurred and have been difficult to extinguish as a result of the prolonged drought conditions. Extreme caution should be exercised with fire associated with outdoor activities (such as campfires, barbecues, fireworks and cigarette disposal).

To respond to this drought advisory, the Drought Management Task Force recommends that water conservation efforts continue to be made to sustain public water supplies and minimize environmental impacts of the dry conditions. Public water suppliers should implement drought response plans as necessary to respond to their system requirements, assure water supply availability and protect environmental resources.

Homeowners and other water users are advised to follow any guidance and adhere to any restrictions put in place by their local water supplier. Homeowners and other facilities with private wells are advised to monitor local conditions accordingly. Municipalities are urged to implement water use restriction bylaws and ordinances to allow for system demand management if necessary during the summer months.

HEALTH NOTES

When summer heat is too much

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Now that we've survived the third hottest August on record, the Center for Disease Control tells us what happened and what we did to avoid the effects of the summer heat. Over the last 20 years, excessive heat exposure caused 8,015 deaths in the United States. During this period, more people in this country died from extreme heat than from hurricanes, lightning, tornadoes, floods, and earthquakes combined. Even young and healthy individuals can succumb to heat, so we reduced our participation in strenuous physical activities during hot weather. Air-conditioning is the number one protective factor against heat-related illness and death. If a home is not air-conditioned, people can reduce their risk for heat-related illness by spending time in public facilities that are air-conditioned. We also helped prevent heat-related illness by frequently drinking water or nonalcoholic fluids; wearing lightweight, light-colored, loose-fitting clothing; or doing our exercising during cooler parts of the day. Periodically checking on neighbors who do not have air conditioning is recommended or bringing them along when you check on neighbors who do have air conditioning is probably good too.

The most serious complication of overheating is heat stroke. Heat stroke occurs when the body is unable to regulate its temperature. The body's temperature rises rapidly, the sweating mechanism fails, and the body is unable to cool down. Body temperature may rise to 106 F or higher within 10 to 15 minutes. Heat stroke can cause death or permanent disability if emergency treatment is not provided.

Warning signs of heat stroke vary but may include the following:

〈 An extremely high body temperature (above 103 F, orally)
〈 Red, hot, and dry skin (no sweating)
〈 Rapid, strong pulse
〈 Throbbing headache
〈 Dizziness, Nausea and/or Confusion
〈 Unconsciousness

If you see any of these signs, you may be dealing with a life-threatening emergency. Have someone call for immediate medical assistance while you begin cooling the victim. Do the following:

〈 Get the victim to a shady area and cool him rapidly using whatever methods you can. For example, immerse the victim in a tub of cool water; place the person in a cool shower; spray the victim with cool water from a garden hose; sponge the person with cool water; or if the humidity is low, wrap the victim in a cool, wet sheet and fan him or her vigorously.
〈 Monitor body temperature, and continue cooling efforts until it drops to 101-102 F.
〈 If medical personnel are delayed, call a hospital emergency room for instructions.
〈 Do not give the victim alcohol to drink, and get medical assistance as soon as possible.

Sometimes a victim's muscles will begin to twitch uncontrollably as a result of heat stroke. If this happens, keep the victim from injuring himself, but do not place any object in the mouth and do not give fluids. Keep his air passages clear.

Other heat related illnesses such as heat exhaustion, heat rash, and sunburn are less life threatening.

Chet Curtis to host animal shelter benefit

The Friends of the Scituate Animal Shelter will hold their fourth annual benefit on Sunday, Sept. 8 from 2-5 p.m. at the Nantasket Beach Hotel and Conference Center at 45 Hull Shore Drive in Hull. Host Kristie Henriksen of Siros Restaurants promises an afternoon of sweeping ocean views and delicious food and beverages. The well-known and popular newsman, Chet Curtis of the New England Cable News will be the master of ceremonies.

Music throughout the afternoon will be provided by the versatile Krisanthi Pappas Combo, featuring piano, bass and vocalist. Another highlight is the alumni table, which showcases pictures of adoptees from the no-kill shelter. This year's silent auction includes gift certificates, paintings and handicrafts by local artists and a colorful autumn gift basket.

This gala event raises funds to provide veterinary care for the cats, dogs and other small pets that wait for adoption at the shelter, which serves the towns of Cohasset, Hull, Norwell and Scituate. Tickets are $50 each and are on sale now at the animal shelter at 61 Driftway in Scituate. For information, call 781-545-8703.

'Hills of Hull' house tour

On Saturday, Sept. 28, there will be a unique opportunity to tour seven private homes tucked away in special locations in the neighborhoods of Hull to benefit Wellspring, a community-based human service organization serving Hull and surrounding towns.

Each of these 'Hills of Hull' homes is perched high on one of the town's many hills and captures a commanding view of the open ocean, harbor and even the Boston skyline. These lovely vistas also include Worlds End, and many of the islands of Boston Harbor, depending on which property is being visited.

Called "The Hills of Hull," the tour will be held between10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Advance tickets may be purchased for $20 prior to Aug. 28 at the following locations: Bookport, Hingham; Cards & Shards, Cohasset; and Mermaids in Hull. Tickets may also be purchased by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull 02045 with an enclosed check.

Local opposition to 40B builds

40B-specific legal counsel.

"Frankly, people just aren't aware of it," said Westcott. "The whole problem is that they don't know what is going on, so a big part of our charter here is to get word out about what is going on.

We are working to try and get proper counsel so the town is fully aware of what all their options are."

The interest on the state level, is impressive. State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, has attended all of the meeting thus far and state Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has had representation at all three meetings, attending Monday night's meeting in person.

"What you can do and what we can do is to continue to do this," said Bradley motioning to the group. "To get the issue in the papers, to get the issue discussed, because if we don't, when it comes up next year it won't look like we have the support. We need to keep the momentum going so we can get some changes."

Bradley dismissed the recent omnibus housing legislation ostensibly aimed at curbing Chapter 40B as "window dressing," while Hedlund had stronger words — "It's a piece of trash." The legislation passed in the House and Senate, but was vetoed by Acting Gov. Jane Swift.

"It's not going to be easy, I'm going to honest with you," said Bradley. "Because they are following the existing law. The best way to proceed on this is through local boards."

That is exactly what Westcott has in mind.

"We want to get the appropriate town boards and committees to do their jobs," said Westcott. "They haven't been doing their jobs. We need a plan so that the state understands that we are working towards the 10 percent. The second thing is we want to put a moratorium on 40B, which we know is something that will go to the courts most likely and will force the selectmen and others to realize that this is a serious issue and we need to invest in it in a serious way."

The group is circulating a petition that would call for a special town meeting in order to declare a moratorium on all Chapter 40B activity in town. A moratorium would be more symbolic than effective. Scituate has employed a similar tactic, and will go to special town meeting on Sept. 23 at 7 p.m.

"I think it is important for the town to make a statement, but I am not sure what validity it will have on the existing proposal in the pipeline," said Bradley of the moratorium. "It's important for us, because I go up to the Statehouse and I say, two towns in my district have called special town meetings to take a stand on this."

Both legislators expressed frustration with the law.

"It's important to point out that in 33 years, 40B has only created 25,000 housing units, 7.5 percent of the housing created state-wide," said Hedlund. "I find it ironic that the goal for a community is 10 percent."

Tom Powers, of 25 Powers Lane., a developer, attended the meeting to get more information.

"I'm not against it," said Powers. "I came more tonight to hear what everybody was talking about but I think that the town has to focus on what is the best and highest use for that piece of property."

The Zoning Board of Appeals will meet for its regular hearings on Sept. 16 at 7:30 and then will meet at 8:30 to discuss 40B.

Early retirement exclusion challenged

Group 2 or 3 employees.

Chapter 116 adds a total of five years to a person's retirement package. Those years can be put toward creditable service or age. It also dictates that the retirement slots be offered to those with the greatest amount of years of creditable service.

"I think the board acted appropriately and we dealt with this out in the open," said selectman Tom Callahan. "Mark (Haddad) and Mike (Buckley, the town accountant) thoroughly researched the pros and cons of the financial benefits of what we are doing. And I think that there is a misconception out there that this law is just for anyone who wishes to retire early to retire early, and that is not what it is there for."

Each department head was consulted about those positions under their jurisdiction and the decision not to include any custodians was made by the selectmen on the recommendation of school Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey.

"We decided not to (include any custodians) at the time because there is a cost involved," said Malvey. "From our standpoint, I didn't have the funds to be able to bring the matter forward. That doesn't mean that if the school committee wished to honor that program, that we can't see our way through it."

Malvey added that it was a purely financial decision.

"It was not a negative attempt to hurt anyone," said Malvey. "It was simply, from a financial standpoint, that we didn't have the money. If upon further review, the committee wishes to do that, we will have to make ends meet."

Much of the frustration with Chapter 116 throughout the state is derived from misunderstandings. Chapter 116 is "opt-in" legislation that a town can choose to adopt or decline. Entitled, "An act providing for local government workforce reduction through an early retirement program for certain employees," it allows a broad interpretation of financial benefit to the town.

The board of selectmen voted to include two Group 4 retirements, both slotted for firemen, because they would be replaced with paramedics, which would allow the town to increase ambulance rates. That increase in rates would more than compensate for the added cost of the early retirement. There was a police officer who would be eligible for the program ahead of the second firefighter, but he informed the town he was not interested in the program.

"The law was designed to be utilized if there was a financial benefit to the town," said Callahan. "I think we are getting a financial benefit and a service benefit."

The board is scheduled to consider the issue at their meeting on Thursday evening at 7 p.m. at the high school.

Cohasset's Bosworth riding wave of success

wife. Repulsed by what she sees and hears at a football party, Anne Marie runs, out straight into the Pacific Ocean, still wearing the designer dress Matt gave her. But he likes her independence and determination and he says to her, "be the girl I met on the beach. The girl who would never ask a guy what to do."

Bosworth spoke about her character. "She's very strong, very independent, but afraid. What I love most about her, and I think I relate to most, is that she's imperfect."

And some of Anne Marie can be seen in Bosworth, who has deferred from Princeton University to continue her career and is currently based in Los Angeles. "I had never even touched a surf board before I moved to Los Angeles," she said. "I got the script, and I loved it's concept and it's theme. the director (John Stockwell) really wanted to cast a surfer. It was my sheer determination that got the part."

"Anne Marie", better known in Cohasset as Kate Bosworth, surfs the Pipe.

In California, before she landed the part Bosworth would be out surfing at 8 a.m. for three hours. then she would work out in a gym for about an hour, and followed that with an hour in a swimming pool. "I gained about 15 pounds in muscle mass," she related.

Then, after landing the part, she went to the Pipeline on a winter day. "The water was raging. There were gigantic mountains of water. I turned to my co-star and said, 'I'm going to die.' " But, like Anne Marie, she prevailed.

Part of it was her athleticism. I'm a pretty athletic person," said Bosworth who played sports at Cohasset High School. "Horseback riding is not easy (her equestrian ability helped her land the part of Judith in "The Horse Whisperer"."

Now she says of surfing, "I love it. I've gone back to Hawaii about six times to surf. "It's really the ultimate rush. I imagine it's the closest thing to flying you can get to."

Leaving the theater on opening weekend two girls in their early teens were heard yelling, "I want to learn surfing !" Bosworth offered advice to them and other potential surfers. "Tell them just to be patient. One of the biggest qualities I improved on was patience. It's the slowest yet steepest learning curve. If you love it, be patient."

Cohasset native Kate Bosworth is making a splash with her new Hollywood flick.

Being an Easterner Bosworth not only had to learn to surf, but also how to play someone involved in that subculture. "The director deserves a gold star on that one," she stated. "Before we even started primary shooting he really threw me into this subculture of surfers. The whole subculture really embraced me. I became my character in a very, very unique way."

As for living in Los Angeles, Bosworth said, "I love it, noting that having relatives there helped. It's always like 75 degrees, with a nice breeze. But I miss the seasons, so much. But I'll be back !"

Contemporary masterpieces in Collector's Choice '02

The work of artists John Singer Sargent, Pablo Picasso, Paul Klee, Grandma Moses, Marc Chagall, Rembrandt, and August Renoir couldn't be more different. These artists, however, all share one little-known commonality.

They all have had their masterpieces on display at the South Shore Art Center in its traditional Collector's Choice exhibition. The Collector's Choice exhibition affords residents of the South Shore and beyond, an opportunity to view, in their own regional art center, museum-quality works of art from private collections. Artwork procured thus far includes work by Andy Warhol, William Wegman, Abe Morrell, Anders Zorn, Marc Chagall and Salvador Dali. Collector's Choice '02 will feature recent acquisitions and focus primarily on what collectors have collected in the last 10 years. The public will have only three days to view the exhibition before the work is returned to its owners and is no longer accessible to the public.

Collector's Choice is scheduled for Sept. 27-29. A gala opening reception will take place at the South Shore Art Center on Friday, Sept. 27, beginning at 5:30 p.m., followed by a dinner at a private seaside home. The exhibition preview party will be enhanced by the opportunity to purchase collectible frames decorated by popular celebrities. Twenty personalities from the art world as well as the world of sports, politics and literature have agreed to decorate and personalize wooden frames that will be offered to the highest bidder in a silent auction.

Tickets for this exhibition fundraiser are $135 ($125 for South Shore Art Center members). On Saturday, Sept. 28, the exhibition will be open to the public from 10a.m. to 4 p.m. On Sunday, Sept. 29, the exhibition will open at 11:30 a.m. with Music Amidst the Masterpieces, an informal brunch and at 1 p.m. a concert by the Boston Chamber Music Society, Ronald Thomas, Artistic Director. Tickets are $35. Reservations for both events can be made by calling 781-383-2787.

Friends, family say farewell to Paul 'PJ' Trendowicz

slightest moment to prepare ourselves for the plunge into darkness," he said. "Our world has been turned upside down.

"Nothing can prepare us for something like this," Fr. Hanwell said. "Nothing can save us from the devastation of such a blow."

Fr. Hanwell said when the blackout occurs, "we rush to seek and find the light, even of a humble candle — and now we rush to find the light, namely the light of Christ."

He said Paul epitomized the motto at B.C. High, "man for others." Fr. Hanwell said his two best friends, also of Cohasset and B.C. High graduates, Greg Smith and Ben Kinch, shared anecdotes before the service with him about "Trendo," which they affectionately called him.

"He was a great person, a people person, he had no enemies, he was always smiling even in first or second period," Fr. Hanwell said. "He loved making people laugh, he loved rock 'n roll, was a talented guitar player, he loved Nirvana and Kurt Cobain and even grew his hair long in middle school, then one day cut it short in the eighth grade surprising many... he was his own unique individual.

"His life was so full in those 18 years."

— The Rev. John J. Hanwell, B.C. High rector

"He loved food, especially Chinese food – his favorite was crab Rangoon, and he loved E.L. Fudge Cookies, he loved cooking steaks on the grill and devised his own marinade sauce in a Ziplock bag... He loved the water and ocean, and yearned for summer in the middle of winter so he could work on his boat in the marina...he loved fast boats and loved lacrosse.

"He loved his brother Dan so much that Paul kept Dan is his life among his friends...he loved his girlfriend Mackenzie who was with him Tuesday, and he loved his parents, Julie and Paul, who were always there for him."

Fr. Hanwell said Paul played basketball in the sixth and seventh grade, and his mother bought him a paperweight shaped like a ball with a saying that he loved, "you're always going to miss the shot you do not take."

He said Paul had no regrets and was always there for his family and friends.

Julie Trendowicz accompanied by her husband, Paul, read a letter her son had written her last spring. She said it was "mother-son senior night" when she received her diploma for "nagging, laughing and supporting" her son through four years at B.C. High. Inside the diploma there was a letter to her.

"Dear Mom, I've not been an easy kid to raise but at the same time, I turned out all right. Thank you for everything you've done for me. I love you," Paul wrote.

Mrs. Trendowicz thanked everyone for sharing their love for "PJ". She said their door would always be open and she hoped Paul's friends would reach out to his brother, Dan.

The Most Rev. Richard J. Malone, regional Bishop, said it was natural and human to question why.

"But instead of concentrating on what we don't know, let's focus on what we do know....the beautiful things said about Paul who will live in our memories forever."

Following the funeral Mass, Paul's family invited everyone to join them for refreshments and conversation in the Parish Center. There, lining the walls of the lobby, Paul's many friends had written notes to him on poster board that were full of fun, humor and fond remembrances.

Paul died Tuesday, Aug. 13 when a game of knee-boarding under Cunningham Bridge went terribly wrong. His friends and emergency personnel tried valiantly to revive him after he was pulled from the water. Paul had planned to attend Bentley College in two weeks.

Cohasset's Polly Logan, fresh and buoyant after a violent home robbery and hospitalization, receives a special silver bracelet with an American flag from GOP Lt. Gov. candidate Kerry Healey, during Healey's appearance in Hingham last weekend. True to form, Logan brought the house down when she said, "Boy, I'm glad I didn't have this on when he had the gun pointed in my face."

Healey makes stop in Hingham

Kerry Healey, Mitt Romney's Lieutenant Governor running mate, was received by nearly 100 Republicans, Democrats and Independents this past Sunday as she underscored the need for the Commonwealth to improve public education and devise a new criminal justice system with the victims in mind.

Speaking at the home of Barbara and James Claypoole. Healey commented from her background of attending poorly funded public schools as a youth in Florida, prior to securing an undergraduate degree in government from Harvard and her Ph.D. from Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland, in law and political science, the latter on a Rotary Club scholarship.

We need English immersion for kindergartners; special emphasis on under-performing urban schools, including parent training; and a return to community school philosophy. We don't need to bus kids long distances if we can improve the schools in their backyards and have education be the framework for uplifting the community," she stated.

Healy also took the time to laud long-time GOP leader Polly Logan of Cohasset, who was present and vocal, after her harrowing recent home robbery and hospitalization. "Polly helped me get started, as she has so many others. Polly is the good and wonderful side of politics, everywhere," Healey concluded. She then presented Logan with a special gift from herself and Romney.

HEDLUND REPORT

BOB HEDLUND

The $301 million Transportation Bond Bill, released from conference committee at 1:51 a.m. in the morning during the marathon last day of formal sessions in the state legislature, is a classic example of what's wrong with the legislative process on Beacon Hill these days.

The committee report was distributed only minutes before its brief debate took place; only two or three other senators aside from myself were given copies, and those who did receive it did not have the time to read it, never mind fully comprehend its contents.

The bill was passed almost unanimously by both branches in those early morning hours, and has since been signed by the Governor with minor revisions. Within it are several gifts to many leadership legislators, including: the authorization to take several parcels of land along the Greenbush Commuter Rail Line without a legislative roll call vote; a change in the make-up of the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority Board that allows for two more members to be appointed by the Governor, weakening the Board's independent status; creation of a Massport Advisory Board that was severely watered down from the original House proposal which would have included the input of members appointed from South Shore communities impacted by Logan Airport's flights, and now includes no such representation; and full funding for the development of the Fall River-New Bedford Commuter Rail Line from the state's general fund with no specific appropriation required, a raid on the state's general fund that is unconscionable given the fact that the legislature already gave the Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority (MBTA) an enormous chunk of money to "forward-fund" the Authority's future expansion efforts during the last legislative session, after a contentious debate that again held up the state's budget process.

Time and again the Massachusetts State Legislature aims to prove its philosophy, which is what is good for the leadership team must be good for the state's citizenry. Increasingly, measures passed on Beacon Hill are shuttled through by leadership with very little input from rank and file legislators, and even less from the electorate. Real debate seldom occurs anymore, except as an occasional pro forma exercise. It appears that the legislature operates with two sets of rules; one adhered to behind closed doors by leadership, the other used by rank and file members.

Whether one agrees or disagrees with the effort to restore the Greenbush Line, the bill's authorization for the land takings required for the project has taken political maneuvering to a new level. Normally any land taking by the Commonwealth requires a two-thirds vote in both branches of the Legislature. By including this taking in a bond bill conference committee report, which can only be voted up or down (individual portions of the bill cannot be singled out for vote), the House and Senate Conferees made sure that the issue would not be debated.

Over the past several months a major debate over the powers of the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority Board arose as a result of the showdown between Governor Swift and Turnpike Board members Christy Mihos and Jordan Levy. The Governor lost the fight in court, but the democratic leadership succeeded through this bill in conspiring with Swift to change the make up of the board in a scheme specifically designed to weaken the board's autonomy – this was an unprecedented move. All of this took place with no public hearing, even though it represents a major policy change.

The way the Massport Advisory Board was created was nothing short of a monumental missed opportunity.

The state's legislators can and should do better by the state's citizenry when it comes to tucking sweeping legislative reforms into innocuous bond bills...

The original version, included in the House of Representatives' bond bill, provided for membership on the board from several towns affected by Logan and Hanscom airport traffic, including Hull, Hingham, Cohasset and Weymouth. This representation would have enabled these communities to have a say in the long-range planning at these facilities, and input concerning related capital expenditures. The advisory board that was approved has no such provisions. So communities that have been desperately striving for a voice in the Logan expansion project have once again been shut out, their opinions of little concern to those who make transportation policy at the state level.

Other backroom favors and precedent-setting maneuvers that are in this package are too numerous to mention. Suffice it to say it is replete with bad policies and backroom deals.

The way leadership was able to garner the votes necessary to pass this unfortunate bond bill was to include smaller pieces of pork for projects throughout the Commonwealth which rank and file members could not vote against for fear of offending their constituents. Is this what passes for good governance today? As a ranking member of the Joint Committee on Transportation I was ashamed by and angry about the outcome of the conference committee process and the bond bill that resulted, and stated as much when the bill was half-heartedly debated at 2 a.m. on August 1st. The state's legislators can and should do better by the state's citizenry when it comes to tucking sweeping legislative reforms into innocuous bond bills, otherwise the legislature will become a virtual monarchy run by a few elected officials who think they know better about such things than the people who elected them.

Bradley, Hedlund Announce Chapter 90 Funds Approved

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) and State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) have announced that Hingham has received $342,362.87 in Chapter 90 funding for economic development in the community. Chapter 90 funding is being allocated to cities and towns based on a formula that factors in the number of miles of local roadway, population, and the employment rate in a given community.

The funding is reimbursed to cities and towns on pre-approved transportation projects as construction unfolds.

"This funding is critical to our community and it will be applied to much needed infrastructure improvements in our community," said Bradley.

"I am pleased to be a part of the state's continued commitment to providing communities with the funding they need to maintain local infrastructure," said Hedlund. "By continuing to invest in our roads and bridges, we are ensuring a solid foundation for economic growth in the coming years."

Bradley Holds Office Hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley (D–Hingham) will be holding district office hours Friday Aug. 30, at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall, 88 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 8 a.m. 9 a.m. If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with Bradley call (617) 722-2120 to schedule an appointment at your convenience.

Palmer Speaks Out Against Legislature's Failure on 40B

Nathaniel Palmer, running for state representative for the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, and North Scituate, spoke out during several recent meetings with constituents in the district, where he addressed the failure by the Legislature to enact necessary reform to the Chapter 40B law.

"What we need is affordable homes, not mega-apartment complexes," explains Palmer. "The projects currently underway in Cohasset and Scituate will do nothing to address the problem associated with the shrinking supply of affordable homes on the South Shore."

As a candidate for the Legislature, Palmer has made the reform of 40B and the need for affordable homes a centerpiece of his campaign. Palmer sites 40B as an example of how good intentions often lead to unintended consequences when bureaucracy runs unchecked.

"When Chapter 40B was implemented three decades ago, the intent was to provide an incentive for developing affordable housing that was 'consistent with local needs' and initiated by the local community," explains Palmer. "But today it is interpreted as a device for out of state developers to override the will and means of the local community. This needs to be stopped immediately."

Reardon keeps swinging away

Cohasset tennis star primed for big final year at Milton Academy

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With all the athletic talent Skipper fans saw at CHS during the 2001-2002 school year, one Cohasset athlete's success slipped by unnoticed: Milton Academy senior Dennis Reardon.

Reardon has compiled two outstanding seasons for the Milton varsity tennis team during his sophomore and junior campaigns. Heading into his senior year, he hopes to lead the team as a second year captain to a New England Championship year.

As a sophomore in 2001, Reardon went 28-0 in his Independent School League (ISL) matches while playing fourth singles. Moving up to third singles this past year, Reardon dropped only one set en route to a 25-1 record as Milton went 13-1 in the regular season.

Reardon also cleaned up at first doubles along with junior partner Ned Samuelson in 2001. As a tandem, they were a perfect 26-0, beating such foes as Thayer Academy, Roxbury Latin, St. Sebastian's, St. Paul's, and then had a season highlight with a victory over Groton during the team loss.

Reardon currently ranks number 23 in New England, that ranking determined from his

O'Connell and Ernst distinguish themselves at premier hockey showcase

By Mike Spellman

Their paths crossed almost daily, but, oddly enough, never on the athletic battlefield until a few weeks ago when the neighbors Greg, O'Connell and Ernst, teamed together to help the South Shore hockey team defend its title in the annual Hockey Night in Boston tourney.

Greg O'Connell, who is transferring this fall from Cohasset High to Belmont Hill Preparatory School to repeat his junior year, was named one of six "Surprise Player" for the prestigious showcase. The slick skating centerman scored the first goal in the championship win, 8-3, over New York last Wednesday, capping off a series of memorable showings at the annual event, including a couple of multi-goal games. He finished with nine goals and 11 assists for the 12-2 team, the 20 points placing him eighth overall in scoring in the 10 team Massachusetts schoolboy division.

Greg Ernst, a hard working left winger, scored the third goal in the game. The efforts for the tourney of this senior-to-be at Tilton Academy were not as ballyhooed as his neighbor's. However, his personal circumstances might well have been the most compelling story to come out of the tourney, the championship game being played the day after his close friend, Paul Trendowicz, died in a tragic drowning accident.

Ernst and O'Connell grew up as neighbors, a year separating them in school and athletic pursuits, where they both began to standout early in the youth ranks.

After eighth grade, Ernst moved on to Xaverian, where he continued to pursue his ardent interests in lacrosse and hockey.

A year later, the other Greg made the decision to stay in the Cohasset public school system, and immediately distinguished himself as a star on both the ice and soccer field.

Ernst transferred to Tilton School, a preparatory school in New Hampshire, after his second year at Xaverian, agreeing to repeat his sophomore year. Greg follows a similar course this fall in transferring to Belmont Hill, another prep school with a prestigious hockey program, and assenting to push graduation back one more year.

Both are clearly hoping to drum up interest from college hockey programs this winter, a cause that was no doubt furthered with their efforts at Hockey Night In Boston.

Ernst missed most of his junior hockey campaign with a broken thumb, finishing with four goals and five assists in 15 games for the three-time defending Div. 2 New England Prep School (NEPSCAC) champs, so he knows he can use all the help he can get.

"Being able to play in this tourney should help," said Ernst. "I like lacrosse too, but hockey is what I'm really hoping to play in college."

Of course, he's not ruling out the thought of playing college lacrosse. Coming off a 40-point season in the extremely competitive

Baseball booms in Braintree

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

A District title in the Little League Williamsport Tourney, a trip to the Div. 1 state championship game for the high schoolers, a 25-1 regular season for the Legion squad followed by a trip to the state final four, and a state championship for the Cranberry Leaguers: not a bad yield for just one town.

In just about any other town in these parts, this kind of spring and summer would be a precursor to at least a couple of parades and keys to the city being handed out like lollipops.

In Braintree, however, this was just another in a long line of "satisfying" baseball seasons.

What Rockland is in our area to basketball and Hingham hockey, Braintree most certainly is to baseball...times about two or three, since so many more young people play baseball.

Braintree High and the Braintree Post 86 Legion squad have posted numerous titles in recent memory, this year included, with many of the stars from those teams moving on to play for the perennial powerhouse White Sox in the Cranberry League. Several — such as Rick Delvecchio, Rich Kalcunas, and Rich Scales – continue to play in to their 30s for the White Sox.

For a town as large as Braintree, it is remarkable to see such a close knit baseball community, an assessment clearly evidenced by the high number of Braintree products who have landed over the years with the White Sox, a team coached by Sean Murphy (himself a Post 86 product). This year's ratio for the semi-pro team, eight of 17 players from Braintree, was actually down from previous years.

Folks should hardly be surprised to learn the breeding for success and loyalty in Braintree baseball starts early. The Braintree American Little League, which draws players from south Braintree (while Braintree National is the "north" league), has won or gone to the finals of the District 8 Williamsport Tourney six of the last seven years. Consider: there are 26 Little Leagues in the District, and all the teams have almost 100 percent turnover every year, with Williamsport teams being comprised primarily of 12-year olds playing their final

On Aug. 10, Cohasset's 9-year-old summer baseball travel team, the Blue Devils defeated Whitman in the District 8 9B Championship by the score of 14-6.

The Blue Devils finished the season with 14 wins and one loss as the travel summer league champions. The other Cohasset 9-year old team, the Bulldogs, also finished with a great season, making it to the semifinals.

The Championship game against Whitman had Drew Cobin pitching the first three innings and Robert Jones closing the game, and both performed extremely well on the mound.

First baseman Eric Wasel recorded several key outs. Jay Salerno and Jeff Durkin covered second to hold Whitman off from making it to third, where Robert Jones and Jeremy Cundall held Whitman and made key plays for crucial outs throughout the game.

Jeff Cavarano and Drew Cobin held the Whitman team with some slick fielding at shortstop.

Michael Monaco kept the opponents to minimal steals with excellent catching.

Key defensive contributions were also delivered by Travers Craven, Chase Murphy and Colin Tarpey, who made an outstanding catch in the championship game.

It was Jeff Durkin who came up with the key defensive play in the game, however, his sensational catch endign a Whitman threat.

Chris Wilson advanced runners with a key bunt.

Patrick Dunn slammed a key double in the game and also worked a crucial walk later.

Sam Richardson played great defense and helped offensively with a key hit.

Drew Cobin and Robert Jones also punched out important hits that gave the Blue Devils the lead for good.

In short, the entire team looked great, with excellent pitching and great offensive and defensive plays to finish with a Championship Victory and great season. The Blue Devils want to thank head coach, Matt Salerno and Assistant Coaches, Andy Cobin; Jay Monaco and Brian Murphy for their hard work and a great travel season.

NESCAC league, it seems wise that he should leave his mind and options open.

O'Connell, the son of former Boston Bruins player and current team General Manager Mike O'Connell, put together a sensational junior campaign on the ice, compiling a South Shore League best 62 points (29 goals, 33 assists) to help the Cohasset High hockey program to its first ever unbeaten regular season. He is also a sensational soccer talent, earning SSL all-star and Mariner All-Scholastic honors in this sport as well as a junior. The prep schools, not surprisingly, came a knocking and Belmont Hill won out.

Greg O'Connell

"Belmont Hill was a good choice for me," said O'Connell, who heads off to school on Sept. 3. "I like what I've heard about it academically and athletically. Going there should help me get in to a good college."

Hockey Night in Boston, now in it's 28th year, is considered by many college recruiters as their most important scouting criterion for evaluating the top underclassmen in the USA. Over 500 H.N.I.B. graduates are now playing at the college level. This past year, over 50 former participants played in the NHL.

year of Little League. Clearly, this is an astounding record.

The Braintree townspeople understandably take a great deal of pride in the baseball its town produces, and the instilling begins early. Little Leaguers are taken in droves to see the high school, Legion and Cranberry League games. The eight, nine and 10-year olds are taught how fun it is to root for the hometown heroes who grew up down the street, or who used to deliver the newspaper, or who simply share the same zip code. Either way, there's just something neat about that.

At the same time, it give them something to shoot for. To these kids, Post 86 and the White Sox are probably no more than a small step below the Red Sox.

To say the least, this is the model to which all towns should aspire.

Good for Carl Everett. He sure showed the Red Sox didn't he? There was no doubt much rejoicing on Planet Carl after the lord and emperor went 5-for-13 with four runs and seven RBIs to help the Rangers take 2-of-4 from his old team, the Red Sox, in the Aug. 1-4 series.

If only the Rangers could play the Red Sox 20 times a year, Carl might have a shot at keeping that average above .200 for a while.

Of course, that's the problem. We all know Carl will lapse back into the self absorption and indifference that had marked his previous 70 games, along with the majority of his Major League career.

But at least he will be able to tell everyone how he stuck it to Red Sox one early August weekend while his team (dead and buried at 21 games off the pace at the time of this writing) played out the string. And, sadly, on Planet Carl, that is enough.

Speaking of the Sox, do you figure we'll ever see a true clutch hit in the late innings — y'know, one that puts them ahead or ties things up with two outs in the eighth or ninth inning or extra frames – y'know, the kind it seems we see someone on the Yankees, A's, Mariners or Angels deliver almost weekly on SportsCenter.

I've been saying for months now that the Sox would win the Wild Card in September by beating up on the AL Least quadruple-A teams (Tampa, Baltimore and Toronto), while the Mariners, Angels and A's contend with one another along with the finally healthy and surging Rangers. Now, I'm not so sure.

The numbers don't lie here, folks: 30-36 since the 40-17 start, 1-5 in extra innings games, 11-20 in one run games.

These players have shown all year they don't respond well when their backs are against the wall. What reason do we have to believe that's suddenly going to change?

My belated weigh-in on the recent activity from the Celtics: in a word, Bravo!

And I'll say that even if Vin Baker turns out to be the slug folks in Seattle insist he was. Bottom line: I applaud Chris Wallace for the intestinal fortitude he's shown with these moves.

The not-even-second-year head shot caller could very easily have maintained the status quo and the vast majority of the Celtics faithful would have applauded him.

But he knew, as most truly close followers did, that this course would have likely left his team well short of even the level it reached last year.

While the 2001-'02 Celtics were clearly a better team than most of us thought, it is also clear that more than a little good fortune was present in the run to the Conference Finals. Given the steps the rest of the conference mettle has taken to improve, Wallace knew his team would have needed an even greater degree of happy fortune in '02-'03 to get even a sniff of the Conference Finals.

Vin Baker, Shammond Williams and 7-foot-3, 22-year old Bruno Sundov are all players who come with some big question marks, but they're also players who come with undeniable considerable upside. We can't say the same for 34-year old Kenny Anderson, Tony Delk, Vitaly Potapenko, Rodney Rogers or Mark Blount, the players the team was forced to give up on to acquire these three players.

Undeniably, Rogers and Anderson played big roles in last year's push, but there limitations were well known: Anderson is a so-so playmaker and often a defensive liability, and Rogers, though a willing banger, does most of his scoring from the perimeter.

If Baker, who played his high school and college ball in Connecticut, remains committed to improving his conditioning (as several reports suggest), and truly is revitalized by the thought of playing closer to home (as he reports), he could provide precisely what it became so obvious the Celtics lacked in the Conference Finals loss to New Jersey: an inside scoring presence.

Many people question the decision to trade away Kenny Anderson on a risky proposition, given: a) that he is entering the final year of his contract and b) the lack of another proven point guard. For now, I'll limit my remarks to the latter consideration.

What are the odds the Kenny of '01-'02 would have been the Kenny of '02-'03? The safe guess is, at 35 and a history of physical woes, he would have been a lot closer to the utterly forgettable Kenny of the two previous years.

What Williams (who came along with Baker from Seattle) lacks in point guard polish, he more than makes up for in athleticism and potential offensive explosiveness. Besides, Antoine Walker has shown he can handle many of the playmaker duties anyway, particularly in the first half of the season, when he was arguably playing the best ball of his career. It says here, he can return to that level if he's forced to handle more playmaking responsibilities — yet another reason the departure of Anderson may prove a blessing.

As for Sundov. He is 7-foot-3, relatively athletic and just 22-years old. At a minimum, he should be much more of an airspace deterrent in the paint than anything else the Celtics have had in recent years. Some say, in time, he could be much more than that.

Bottom line: Wallace put himself and, quite possibly, his job on the line. If these moves prove to be duds, it's his neck on the chopping block. He could have stayed pat and safe (a course generally recommended for most "unproven" G.M.s) and trotted out a "competitive" Celtics team next year, but he wanted more. For that alone, I applaud him.

Though it is difficult to imagine there ever being a more enjoyable professional sports season in these parts than the one we experienced last winter with the Patriots, the oddsmakers and so called NFL "experts" are certainly doing their best to see to it that this coming one could be pretty darn close.

It's tough for me to offer an opinion on what's more humorous: the 8-1/2 +/- on wins Vegas is putting before us or Pittsburgh being the favorite in the season opener at Gillette Stadium. OK, for the moment, I might be leaning a hair more toward the latter.

SSBC'S Fall Ball League a big hit

HINGHAM - Starting in September, the South Shore Baseball Club's annual Fall Outdoor Baseball Leagues, designed for players seven to 18 years of age in four different age groups, swings into action at fields in Braintree and South Weymouth.

More than 200 players participated in the SSBC Fall Outdoor Baseball Leagues in each of the last two years. This season's five-week session is scheduled to run into October.

"Our leagues are for players who want to take advantage of New England's best baseball weather," SSBC president/director Frank Niles Jr. said. "We have games, practices and quality instruction for everybody. Braintree and Weymouth are great baseball towns and we're very happy to have our Fall League games played there."

Ages 7-9: Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, 4-6 p.m., Sept.10-Oct. 11, at Hollingsworth Park in Braintree. Players enter individually and are placed on teams by SSBC's staff. Practice, drills and games combine for plenty of baseball.

Ages 10-12: Tuesdays & Thursdays, 4-6 p.m., and Saturdays, 10 a.m.-12 noon, Sept. 10th start at Hollingsworth Park in Braintree. If enrollment increases the number of participants to field seven teams, each team will have a bye twice during the five-week schedule. Teams will be based geographically to facilitate car-pooling.

Ages 13-15: Mondays & Wednesdays, 4-6 p.m., and Saturdays, 10 a.m.-12 noon, Sept. 9th start (for clinic) at Stella Tirrell Park, South Weymouth. Team assignments and schedules will be distributed at the Sept. 9th clinic.

Ages 16-18 (High School Varsity): Sunday doubleheader games for eight consecutive Sundays, Sept. 8-Oct. 27, three to five SSBC teams will compete against teams from Brookline, Belmont, Milton, Weymouth, Silver Lake, Bridgewater, Needham and Bridgewater.

SSBC is a full service, year-round club and training facility for baseball and softball players, ages five and older, in Hingham. For more information about SSBC or its Fall Outdoor Baseball Leagues call (781) 740-6466 or visit its Web site at www.ssbc.com.

impressive record in USTA tournaments. Meanwhile, Samuelson, who will also be a senior this fall, is the top 18-and-under male playing in New England. To give some locals an idea of what it takes to earn those rankings, Reardon has beaten Norwell phenom Sam Bitetti and can play evenly with Hingham's stellar ace Brian Marsden. Samuelson, meanwhile, has easily disposed of both Max and Luke Tedaldi, the Newton North twins who, between them, have won the last three public school State championships.

Although Reardon and Samuelson had success against Groton, the rest of the team could not follow suit as G.A. was Milton's only regular season loss. Groton eventually went on to win the ISL with a 14-0 record. However, as a top two team in their league, Milton Academy did move on to the New Englands, where they beat Cheshire and Choate in the quarters and semis before faltering in the finals, again to league rival Groton.

This season, however, the team appears locked and loaded to win back the ISL crown and possibly go and win the whole thing. Reardon, who was a captain as a junior, will be one of four outstanding seniors leading their team in 2003. Samuelson, Reardon, and Reardon's co-captain, Ted Mabry, give Milton a frightening 1-2-3 trio. All three will put in a serious bid to go to Junior Nationals this winter.

Now well past the July 1 date where coaches are allowed to begin contacting prospects, several colleges have already expressed an interest in Reardon. So far, he has heard from New England schools Boston College, a Division I school, and Fairfield and Middlebury, both Division III schools with highly regarded tennis programs. In addition, Loyola in Baltimore and Georgetown have called Reardon.

Still, Reardon admits: "I haven't made a solid choice of where I want to go yet."

Wherever he decides to go, it's a safe bet that the college tennis coach will be more than pleased to have him on board.

The Old Ship story you may not know

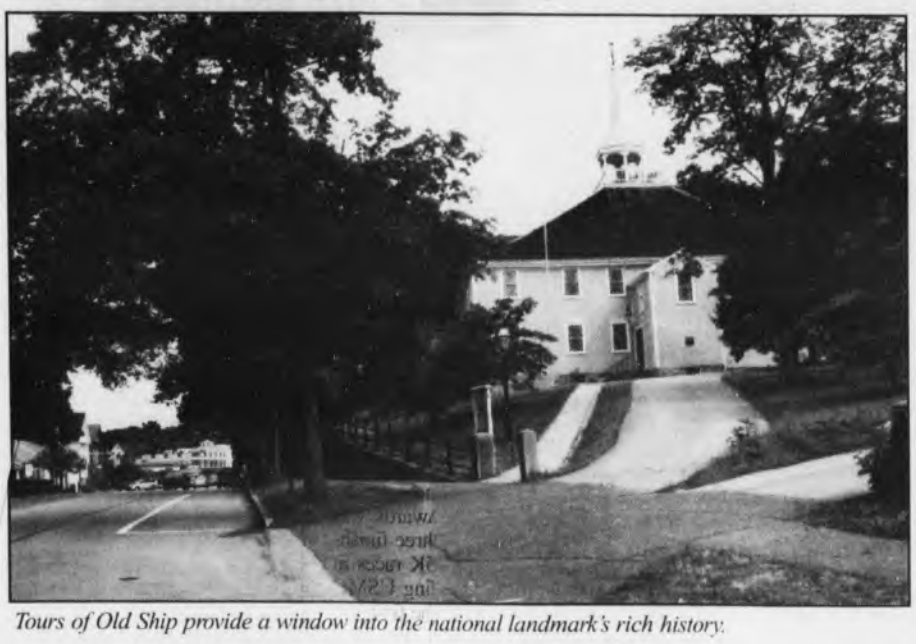
Church offers tours all summer

By Kevin Doherty
CORRESPONDENT

The Old Ship Church, one of the pillars of historic Hingham and a National Landmark, is offering tours given by volunteer Hingham residents. There is a wealth of information given about the church; information that even regular parishioners may not know.

Volunteers, who have learned a vast array of facts about the church, conduct tours run from 1-4 p.m., every day during the summer except Saturday.

"Anyone can volunteer to be a tour guide.," says Jane Tremblay, tour guide coordinator.



Tours of Old Ship provide a window into the national landmark's rich history.

The Old Ship Church was erected in 1681 and is the oldest church structure in the United States to have been used continually for public worship.

Volunteers are given a host of written materials containing historical facts and an orientation session on how to conduct the tours. Tours are done as an informal process, with tours beginning on a walk-in basis. Tour guides stay at the church during the appointed hours until anyone interested in a tour comes to the church. Tours can be variable in length to suit the needs of those taking the tours, but take an hour on the average. The average tour size, according to Tremblay, is four-to-six people.

The Old Ship Church, first called the First Parish, was erected in 1681 and is the oldest church structure in the United States to have been used continually for public worship. A Sunday service is held for today's residents, and the church experience is similar in many ways to the church experience of 350 years ago. The church has gone though many changes, though, so the way it is seen now is not the way it has always been.

Old Ship Church, which changed its name after other churches in the area were built, is so named because of the horizontal rafters of the church's interior that resemble the support planks of a ship. Early Hingham churchgoers would expect to spend all of Sunday either in or near the church, with a three-hour service and then a service until dusk after a few hours' break to eat at residences around the church.

"It's always been a democratic church," says tour guide Edith Howard. For the first 150 years the annual Town Meeting was held in the church, and all the decisions regarding the church were decided by a vote of all the parishioners. Howard, who has been a tour guide for three years, said that the high-raftered ceiling was covered over in the year 1755, but the most drastic changes to the church came in the year 1869.

In an effort to make the Old Ship a "real Victorian" church, town members did a great deal of construction and change to the church. The church was raised up to put a granite foundation under the church and to replace the rotting floor. The traditional box pews were removed and mostly destroyed, to be replaced with more conventional pews. Other things added to the church were velvet curtains, carpeting central heating, yellow wallpaper, and white woodwork. The color of the church was changed from its original color of ochre (the color that is seen today) to a gray paint scheme.

The church was to stay that way until the 1930s when a descendant of one of Old Ship's ministers financed a renovation. Ebineezer Gay, descendant of the minister of the same name, had the church brought back to its original appearance. The box pews were brought back, with some of the few pew doors that survived the first changes being put back where they belong. The covering for the ceiling was knocked down, the carpeting, curtains, and wallpaper taken away, and the windows were replaced. Some 60 years later in 1994 the church was painted its original color after stripping away the gray.

Today the Old Ship Church offers information on these traditions and changes. Expenses for the tours are covered by the sales of souvenirs such as postcards, informational tapes, and brass plaques. One section of the church has been set off as a museum, containing pieces of the church's past such as pictures and drawings of the church's exterior and interior, news articles, and old pew doors and windows.

Volunteers like Howard, who furnished all of this historical information about the church, await people from all over the country and the world to come to the church and learn about all the history and tradition that makes the Old Ship a mainstay of Hingham's heritage.

All aboard! Next stop Carver

Thomas the Tank Engine rolls into Edaville USA

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Family fun is right on track at Edaville USA in Carver where they'll welcome Thomas the Tank Engine to town this week.

During a "Day Out With Thomas" children can climb aboard a train pulled by a full-size replica of the tank engine — the beloved storybook character created by the Rev. Wilbert Vere Awdry and marketed internationally by the Gullane Entertainment.

Once aboard visitors take a 35-minute journey on the 5.5-mile narrow gauge railroad that winds through Edaville's 1,300 scenic acres including its beautiful cranberry bogs.

"I've always loved the Thomas message. It's the kind of message we have at Edaville. Having Thomas here is absolutely the perfect marriage for us."
Edaville USA CEO and Partner Jon Delli Priscoli

Thomas' visit to the Carver amusement park is the tank engine's only Massachusetts stop on a 55-city national tour, and Edaville USA CEO and Partner Jon Delli Priscoli said he's looking to make it the official New England home for Thomas.

Priscoli, who along with Cranrail Corporation partners Douglas Beaton and John Flagg took over operations at Edaville in 1999, said he became interested in forming a partnership with Gullane and Thomas based on his children's love of the character.

A year and a half later, a Thomas replica specially built to ride the 2-foot gauge railway at Edaville is making his debut in Carver Saturday (Aug. 24). A "Day Out With Thomas," will run through Sept. 2, but the plucky tank engine will make a return trip Nov. 9-17 for the only Thomas holiday event in the nation, Priscoli said.

Determined to make the Thomas event a family fixture, Priscoli said the tank engine is already booked for three dates at the park in both 2003 and 2004.

Priscoli said he couldn't be happier about the addition of Thomas at Edaville USA.

"I've always loved the Thomas message," said Priscoli, of the character's old fashioned, low tech, hands-on approach to educating children. "It's the kind of message we have at Edaville. Having Thomas here is absolutely the perfect marriage for us."

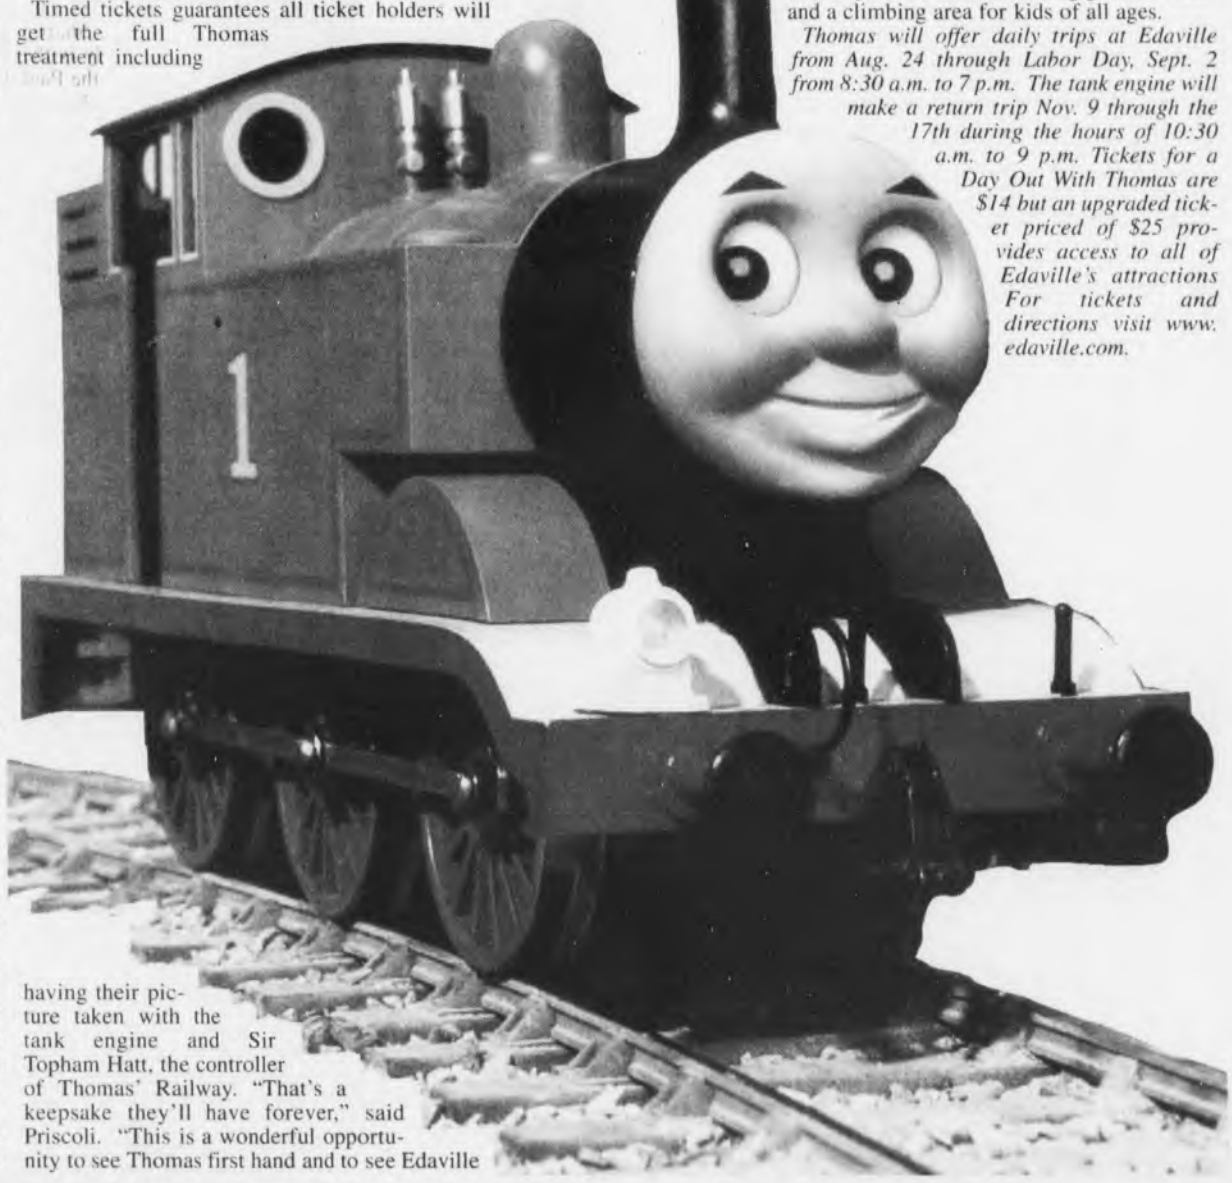
Priscoli even likens Edaville's scenic landscape to the fictional Isle of Sodor that Thomas the Tank Engine traverses in the books and videos. Another benefit to Thomas' arrival at Edaville is the specially designed, smaller-scale tank engine is more accurate depiction of the train in size relation to people on the videos. "Only our Thomas is size appropriate. It's the most accurate depiction of all the replicas," Priscoli said.

Based on the huge popularity of Thomas nationwide and particularly in New England — Priscolli said Thomas sales are close to $1 billion annually in the U.S.— Edaville is expecting a big turnout for a "Day Out with Thomas."

Tickets are selling fast, notes Priscoli:

"We're selling about 8,000 per day."

Timed tickets guarantees all ticket holders will get the full Thomas treatment including having their picture taken with the tank engine and Sir Topham Hatt, the controller of Thomas' Railway. "That's a keepsake they'll have forever," said Priscoli. "This is a wonderful opportunity to see Thomas first hand and to see Edaville again.



And there's more than ever to see at the park, notes Priscoli

In addition to train rides through the bogs, the Cranberry Festival held each fall and the hugely popular Festival of Lights held during the holiday season, Edaville's summer attractions include amusement rides, paddle boats, an outdoor playground and Sprayground area where kids can cool off under sprinklers, Cranberry World — a unique display chronicling the farming and harvesting of our native fruit, and the Wheels and Fun Midway Games Area featuring games of skill and a climbing area for kids of all ages.

Thomas will offer daily trips at Edaville from Aug. 24 through Labor Day, Sept. 2 from 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. The tank engine will make a return trip Nov. 9 through the 17th during the hours of 10:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Tickets for a Day Out With Thomas are $14 but an upgraded ticket priced of $25 provides access to all of Edaville's attractions For tickets and directions visit www.edaville.com.

Mother-daughter tribute

Raffaels "That's Entertainment" honors Judy and Liza

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

It is a very rare that the son or daughter of a superstar becomes a superstar in his or her own right.

Liza Minnelli is definitely one, however, as was her late mother, Judy Garland.

With its current offering, "That's Entertainment," J. M. Productions' Dinner Theatre at Raffael's is presenting a first-class tribute to the legendary mother and daughter featuring first-rate performances by singers Carol O'Shaughnessy and Jan Peters.

O'Shaughnessy and Peters share the spotlight for an upbeat opener that includes "We Could Make Such Beautiful Music," "The Best Is Yet To Come," and the revue's rousing title song.

Peters soon cedes the stage, temporarily, to the veteran O'Shaughnessy who serves up a sampling of the Garland songbook that begins with one of the performer's earliest hits, "You Made Me Love You." Although a huge star, Judy Garland was a tiny woman. She may have been just a bit over five feet tall, but she had a big, open-throated voice. Like Garland, the similarly diminutive O'Shaughnessy is a vocalist for whom a microphone doesn't always seem necessary.

Saying she is channeling Garland, O'Shaughnessy periodically mimics the performer's many manic mannerisms to great comic effect. O'Shaughnessy's humor — honed during a long career in local cabaret rooms and nightclubs — serves her well in Raffael's elegant Skyline Room. She confidently delivers "If Love Were All," "When You're Smiling," "The Trolley Song" and "Johnny One Note." She is less successful on "San Francisco," which suffers from excess harshness.

Saying she is channeling Garland, O'Shaughnessy periodically mimics the performer's many manic mannerisms to great comic effect.

O'Shaughnessy is again affecting, however, when she sings "Liza, All The Clouds'll Roll Away" as a lovely means of bringing Peters back to center stage. The pair have worked together before and their banter over each other's ages, heights and romantic misfortunes is polished and winning.

Their Garland/Minnelli medley — with Peters representing Liza —contains some of the show's best-known music including "Hooray For Love,"

Long-time husband and wife performers Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme are back on stage this weekend at the South Shore Music Circus.

Still classy after all these years

Steve and Eydie return to Music Circus

For more than 40 years now, audiences everywhere have known that they can expect the finest of style and material whenever Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme are on stage with the best of musicians and the best of American popular music.

On Sunday, the long-married musical duo will bring their classic and always classy nightclub act to the South Shore Music Circus.

Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme met in the 1950s when they were both featured performers on the Steve Allen version of NBC-TV's "Tonight Show." They were married on Dec. 29, 1957 at the old El Rancho in Las Vegas. Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward were married there earlier the same day and served as witnesses. Clam Chowder Light

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Although I have experienced the combination of dairy and shellfish in even the best of four-star restaurants, I have never understood it. Shellfish, especially clams, oysters, and mussels, have a clean, briny tang to them that ought not to be muddied by the addition of milk or cream. So I set out to create a clam chowder that was clean, refreshing, and yet substantial enough for a one-pot supper.

I didn't have to look far. In Jasper White's excellent book, "50 Chowders," there is a terrific recipe for Clam, White Bean, and Potato Chowder. Having made it a half dozen times, I found the end result virtually flawless but decided to go through each step of the recipe to see if I could simplify or streamline.

The first issue was the clams. Jasper calls for small quahogs or cherrystones. Well, quahogs are virtually impossible to find at the markets I shop at and cherrystones were not widely available either. Fortunately, littlenecks are easy to find and make delicious chowder although they are the most expensive variety of the three. I thought that the recipe could be greatly simplified by purchasing bottled clams but the processing removed all of their sweetness and added a slightly metallic aftertaste so fresh clams were a must.

The second major ingredient is the beans. Canned beans were a disappointment – they were flat, mushy, and metallic tasting. I then tried a superior brand of canned beans (Goya) and they were better but still not nearly as good as the dried variety. Simple navy beans are fine and they cook quicker than the large lima beans recommended by Jasper and you can also use cannellini beans. The original recipe calls for puréeing half the beans to thicken the soup. I found that leaving all of the beans intact makes a thinner chowder but one that has a more distinctive clam flavor which I liked. The beans should not be salted since they absorb the saltiness off the clam juice when they are simmered in the chowder.

Although Jasper would cringe at the notion of NOT using salt pork in a chowder – this ingredient is, after all, the one common thread in almost all chowder recipes – I found that much salt pork in the supermarket is too fatty or too salty. Good bacon is easier to find and I liked the notion of sprinkling some of the cooked bacon over each bowl before serving.

As for the vegetables, I dumped the celery since I felt that the chowder was better without it. I thinly sliced the onion instead of dicing it for better texture. As for the tomatoes, I liked 1 1/2 cups instead of one and I found that canned tomatoes didn't add much to this dish. Fresh, good-quality seasonal tomatoes are great, however. As for the rest of the year, I would just skip them.

For the potatoes, I preferred Yukon Gold to red potatoes – they seem to be the only variety of potato that really has good flavor these days.

For herbs, I agreed with Jasper that two bay leaves are a nice addition. I increased the thyme to four sprigs but dumped the fresh basil near the end of cooking since I thought it was an odd combination with the other ingredients. I reduced the crushed red pepper to 1/4 teaspoon from 1/2 and the chowder needed no extra salt since the clam broth was plenty briny.

Making this chowder a day ahead of time does improve its flavor as Jasper suggests although more than one day in the refrigerator turns the potatoes mushy. If you make this recipe for a crowd and double it, note that you will have a huge amount of clams to cook – you will either need a huge lobster pot or you should cook them in two batches.

CLAM, BEAN AND POTATO SOUP WITH BACON AND TOMATOES

This recipe is very similar to one published by Jasper White in his excellent book "50 Chowders." I highly recommend the book and this recipe. Also note that the bigger the clams, the easier it is to make this recipe although the flavor of littlenecks was superior. I suggest making this recipe ahead of time, refrigerate the chowder once the tomatoes and beans are added.

8 ounces white beans such as navy or white northern, rinsed and picked over
8 pounds littlenecks, cherrystones, or quahogs, scrubbed clean
4 pieces thick-cut bacon cut into matchsticks
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 large onion, peeled, quartered lengthwise, and thinly sliced
2 bay leaves
4 sprigs fresh thyme
1/4 teaspoon crushed red pepper
2 medium garlic cloves, peeled and minced or pressed
2 medium Yukon Gold potatoes, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch dice, about 2 cups
2 medium ripe tomatoes, peeled and seeded and cut into 1/2-inch dice (skip this ingredient if tomatoes are flavorless)
1/4 cup chopped fresh parsley

1. Place beans in a saucepan with 6 cups water over high heat. Bring to a boil and simmer for 30 to 50 minutes or until tender. (Do NOT undercook beans.) Drain and set aside.

2. Place clams in a large pot with 2 cups water over high heat. When water boils, cover pot and cook for 4 minutes. Remove cover and quickly (but gently) stir clams. Cook an additional 4 minutes or until most of the clams have opened. Remove open clams to a large bowl. Continue cooking a few minutes until almost all of the clams have opened – discard unopened clams. Drain clam broth into a large measuring cup. When clams cool, remove meat (you should have 2 cups) and refrigerate.

3. Meanwhile, cook bacon in a large pot until brown and crispy. Remove and reserve. Pour all but one tablespoon bacon fat and add olive oil. Add the onion, bay leaves, thyme, and red pepper and stir to coat. Reduce heat to medium-low, cover, and cook for 8 minutes or until onion is translucent. Add garlic and cook for 2 minutes. Add 4 cups reserved broth being careful not to pour off any grit that has settled to the bottom. Add the potatoes, stir, bring to a simmer, cover, and cook for 10 minutes. If you like, mash or purée half the beans (for a thicker chowder) and add the whole beans, the puréed beans, the tomatoes and cook for an additional 10 minutes. Roughly chop clams. Remove pot from heat, add clams and let sit for 2 minutes covered. Taste for salt and pepper. Serve with a sprinkling of reserved bacon and chopped parsley.

Serves 6 as a light supper and cover and simmer for 10 minutes.

Green thumbs up

An entire week of blazing heat and stifling humidity has intensified this summer's drought, transforming many South Shore landscapes into desert wastelands. During the month of July, Mother Nature provided only one-quarter of her usual precipitation. Lakes, ponds and brooks have been reduced to alarmingly low levels demanding that a large percentage of our local communities impose water restrictions. Although cooler temperatures are in this week's forecast, significant moisture does not appear to be forthcoming and many of our valued plants will struggle to survive.

The telltale signs of drought are around every corner including straw-colored lawns with scattered patches of lime-green crabgrass, premature coloring and falling of leaves, and regrettably, many crispy brown plants that may have already succumbed due to our prolonged lack of moisture. At greatest risk are trees, shrubs and perennials that were planted this season. Although lawns and many established plants may appear on the verge of expiration, a large number of these plants have entered a premature dormancy. Given adequate moisture in the coming months prior to the ground freezing, barring a severe winter without snow, a good percentage should survive and recover next year.

When restrictions allow, prioritize your watering schedule to focus on those plants introduced into the landscape most recently. Plants that were already weakened by spring canker worm defoliation this year should also be given moisture whenever possible. Carefully monitor your landscapes noting plants that are wilted in the early morning and evening, as these tend to be signs of severe stress. Midday wilting during excessive heat is not necessarily an indicator of water deprivation. It is not too late to apply a summer mulch around plants to help conserve moisture and to cool and reduce fluctuations in surface soil temperatures.

Equally important is the need to keep a watchful eye out for insect infestations. Stressed plants are considerably more susceptible to disease and insect invasions and in combination with drought stress, these additional assaults could lead to many a plant's demise. Aphids and spider mites are particularly opportunistic but often difficult to detect due to their small size and excellent camouflage. Close scrutiny of plants demonstrating yellow, distorted leaves is critical to determine whether these pests are present.

Despite the drought and oppressive heat, many hardy plants continue to brighten our dry landscapes. Few plants rival the showy blooms of the flamboyant rose mallow (Hibiscus moscheutos). Perhaps more correctly categorized as a woody-based perennial rather than a shrub, established clumps produce woody canes 5-feet high by 5-feet wide. Broad, circular blooms may reach dramatic proportions of up to 12 inches across in shades of pink, red and white, many of which display a contrasting red eye. Provide these tropical-looking plants a moisture-retentive, well-drained soil in full sun to which lime has been added for a more neutral pH. Patience is required each spring as new growth rarely appears until late May or early June from the base of the plant. Old canes will not produce flowers or foliage in subsequent years and can be cut down in autumn but are sometimes best left until spring to mark the plant's location.

Numerous rose mallow cultivars have been developed including the 'Southern Belle Series' (10-inch pink, white or red flowers), 'Lady Baltimore' (pink with red centers) and 'Lord Baltimore' (glowing red), and the 'Disco Belle Series', 20-inch, compact growers often treated as annuals. Among my newest acquisitions is a spectacular cultivar, 'Kopper King' with deep bronze, maple-cut foliage and a huge white flower highlighted by a burgundy center and 'Sweet Caroline', a lovely ruffled deep pink with a deeper rose-colored eye-zone.

"After You've Gone," "You And The Night And The Music" and "It All Depends On You." Unfortunately, O'Shaughnessy and Peters behave like two belters each determined to hit her own individual ball out of the park. Each has her share of soaring vocal moments. Together, however, their voices seem too separate to ever sustain a smooth blend.

When "Mama" Carol leaves the stage to Peters for her Minnelli set, the latter wastes no time in asserting herself. With five songs by John Kander and Fred Ebb and one by Jule Styne and Stephen Sondheim, Peters is in good hands and great voice. She is powerful on the lament "Maybe This Time" and stirring on "Cabaret," but it is another of Minnelli's signature songs that allows Peters a chance to almost steal the show. Maybe only Minnelli herself could get as much mileage out of a single performance of "Ring Them Bells." Peters not only has her audience ringing its bells (and car keys), but also eating out of her hand.

For the show's closer, the pair is reunited for a strong medley of "When The Saints Go Marching In," "Brotherhood of Man," and "It All Depends on You." They also share perhaps their best moments together vocally on "Over The Rainbow." Musical Director Jim Rice provides solid accompaniment throughout.

("That's Entertainment," starring Carol O'Shaughnessy and Jan Peters, will be at Raffael's Restaurant, 1 Enterprise Drive, North Quincy, through Aug. 23. For tickets and information, call 617/328-1600.)

Since 1960, Lawrence and Gorme have appeared together as "Steve & Eydie." Indeed, that moniker is so well-known that last names seem almost unnecessary. Over the years, Eydie has earned a Grammy Award for her recording of "If He Walked Into My Life," and the pair have shared a Grammy for their album, "We've Got Us." Their television specials, saluting great American composers from Irving Berlin and Cole Porter to George and Ira Gershwin, have earned them numerous Emmy awards.

Throughout their careers, Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme have always made time for live appearances. For all their success with recordings and television, the concert stage remains their true professional home.

AUGUST 22 - 30, 2002

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21
Saturn and Uranus align at 3:17 a.m. The full moon continues to build up, as the moon travels in Aquarius. Current planetary influences are ideal for brain-storming, problem-solving. The moon interacts with Venus and Pluto this afternoon, and a Venus/Pluto alignment culminates in the early morning hours. This planetary combination tends to intensify and deepen emotions. You can strengthen the ties and add new depth and dimension to key relationships. Open the doors to a higher level of communication.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22
Gear up for a hectic morning. It is often difficult to sleep and get proper rest in full moon periods. Others may be moody, argumentative. The moon opposes Mars at 10:28 a.m. And conjoins Uranus at 12:49 p.m. Take it slow and easy. Drive defensively. The full moon culminates at 6:29 p.m., and the moon becomes inactive. Relief arrives at 7:11 p.m., when the moon enters Pisces. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23
Planetary action can make for another challenging day. At 3:17 a.m. the sun enters Virgo, remaining there until September 23. The moon continues to travel in Pisces, highlighting all creative endeavors. You can make gains developing arts and crafts, hobbies, artistic projects. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Applying alignments of Mars/Uranus and Mercury/Saturn urge you to use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Spend time alone; meditate for peace of mind.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 24
Challenging planetary influences can make for a rough start to this day. Mars opposes Uranus at 5:26 a.m., and Mercury forms a 90-degree alignment to Saturn at 6:58 a.m. Focus on the positives instead of getting caught up in worries, self-doubts, anger. Storm clouds move out by midmorning, and the remainder of the day rates high for catching up on rest and relaxation. If you have work projects to accomplish, a harmonious alignment of Mars and Saturn aids focus and stamina.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 25
At 2:57 a.m. the Pisces moon opposes Mercury and becomes inactive. An Aries moon takes over at 6:47 a.m., setting a fast pace. Get back in the swing of favorite sports or exercise programs. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. You can get work projects out of the way in short time. A lunar alignment to Jupiter also makes this day prime for all outdoor activities, social events.

MONDAY, AUGUST 26
At 6:59 a.m. the planet Pluto, standing at 15-degrees Sagittarius, begins direct travel. Pluto represents rebirth and transformation. It brings a time to let go of anger, resentments, negativity; forgive and forget. The moon continues to travel in Aries, setting the stage for a productive day. However, you must carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. At 5:10 p.m. Mercury enters Libra, and the green light goes on for new beginnings in your personal or professional life.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 27
Planetary influences rate high for productivity today. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. The Aries moon forms harmonious contacts to Uranus, Saturn and Mars until 5:18 p.m., when it becomes inactive. At 7:31 p.m. the moon enters Taurus, making this a wonderful evening to kick back and enjoy the good things in life.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28
A 90-degree alignment of the Taurus moon and Jupiter this morning warns against overdoing or going to extremes. Avoid making major purchases, decisions, commitments. In the afternoon the moon aligns with Neptune, generating an easygoing, laid-back mood. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters. If you are working, finish old projects and handle routine chores. Enjoy good food, music, conversation with loved ones this evening.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 29
The planet Mars enters Virgo at 10:38 a.m., remaining there until October 15. The moon continues active travel in Taurus all day. Make up a list of things to do, and you can be most productive. Streamline your workload; don't make any more commitments until the backlog has been cleared.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30
At 12:44 a.m. the Taurus moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. The moon enters Gemini at 7:45 a.m. and aligns with Mars at 8:55 a.m. Stay alert and use common sense. Storm clouds move out by 10:00 a.m., and the green light for new beginnings goes on. Harmonious lunar alignments to Mercury and Jupiter generate an upbeat, social mood. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:31 p.m. Don't be a hermit tonight. This is a wonderful evening for partying.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 31
Planetary action makes this day prime for initiating new beginnings, particularly in your personal life. It also brings a time to reassess progress toward future goals and explore new options or alternatives. Communications get the green light; get in touch with friends you haven't spoken to in a while. Chat, network, collaborate. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

School Dept. to run buses

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The school department has decided to take the student busing service in-house again, after a second bidding process produced no results.

"I think the plan right now is that we are going to go in-house with it," said School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn. "Obviously we didn't get any bids. There is fierce competition in transportation, and given the size of Cohasset, trying to bring someone in to run our buses is not a feasible option."

For the past two years, Ingle Bus Service of Hanover held the contract, operating the town's buses, but Ingle decided he was not interested in renewing the contract without running his own vehicles.

The revised secondary bid

For Cohasset resident Kenny Thayer, most weekends are a drag.

But, that doesn't mean he doesn't enjoy them.

Thayer, who works for the town's Department of Public Works, spends his summer weekends in Epping, N.H., drag racing at the New England Dragway.

"I've been in racing since 1965, and I've enjoyed it from that point on," said Thayer, who races in the Modified Class, which is just above the Street Class. "I used to work for a guy who used to do regular racing – circle racing. I learned a lot from him by building motors and setting cars up. He liked the circle track racing, I got into the drag racing, which is still racing. One goes in a straight line and one goes in a circle I just stayed with it and it just grew."

It's back to school time again

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

On Sept. 4, the halls of the town's schools will again be filled with students.

"We are going to see beautiful, happy faces coming through this building," said Osgood School Principal Janet Sheehan. "That is the nice thing about K-3, everybody is happy all the time. Well, not all of the time, but we are looking forward to it, everybody is excited."

That's not to say that the schools weren't busy all summer long.

Construction continued at the Deer Hill and middle-high schools, as the $41 million school projects move closer to conclusion. The Deer Hill School is scheduled to be completed in this December and the middle-high school is slated for a December 2003 finish. After a year of construction though, all involved have acclimated to the changing surroundings, and this year, they are beginning to see parts of the finished project.

"Everyone has a year of construction under their belt, so most should be used to it," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Not only that, but the students are going to be entering brand-new, completed areas of construction, the high school especially, with the brand-new gym, brand new cafeteria, new science wings and locker rooms. I think they'll be excited."

The Osgood School has served as the home for some of the town's summer programs, and is providing space for the Deer Hill faculty and staff to prepare for the year.

"We're happy for the other schools that they will end up having something like we do," said Sheehan, whose new building replaced the old Osgood School. "We've been willing to work with them as far as scheduling meetings here and giving them space. We housed all the summer activities here."

The extensive use of the new Osgood School provided a challenge in getting ready for the school, a challenge that Sheehan said the town met with aplomb.

"It's been a great, coordinated effort," said Sheehan, mentioning the work of the Osgood and Deer Hill janitorial and maintenance staffs, the DPW, the town manager, and a lengthy list of others. "They have done a great

How to vote by absentee ballot

Absentee ballots for the State Primary on Sept. 17, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Sept. 16, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Libertarian, or Massachusetts Green Party, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A voter must vote in the party that he is enrolled. However, unenrolled voters who pull a ballot at the State Primary do not become enrolled members of that party and do not need to complete a charge of enrollment card — they remain unenrolled. Voters enrolled in a political designation may not take a ballot at the State Primary.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Sept. 17, 2002 to be counted.

The town will be using the Accu-Vote optical scan system. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots an be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Bradley hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D – Hingham, will hold district office hours, this Friday Sept. 6 at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall - upstairs, 88 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 4-5 p.m. If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with Bradley, call (617) 722-2120 to schedule an appointment.

CRC is part-time

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation has reduced its hours of operation from full-time to part-time. As a result the CRC will no longer have regular office hours. The office will be open in the day or evening by appointment only.

If you need assistance or would like to make an appointment please leave a voice message for Dean Rizzo, Executive Director at (781) 383-2449. The CRC office is located at 87 Elm St., which is across from Kimball's By The Sea.

Contractor picked for new water pipes

D&C Construction of Rockland, Mass. has been selected by the Water Commission as the contractor to replace 1.2 miles of undersized and deteriorated water pipes in Cohasset starting this Fall to improve fire protection and water service throughout Cohasset.

"D&C's low bid was $180,000 less than the estimated cost of this project, which may allow us to use those funds for other system improvements," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. D&C was the contractor for the installation of sewer lines in Cohasset in 2000.

"This system improvement project," said McNabb, "is a $1.5 million project to improve fire protection and water service by replacing undersized water pipes in Beechwood Street (to improve Doane Street and Aaron River Road), Bound Brook Lane, Hammond Ave., Hobart Lane, Lothrop Lane, Red Gate Lane, Sheldon Road, Westgate Lane, and Windsor Lane."

"We are working closely with residents to minimize impacts from the project," said Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt, who has met frequently with residents of Hobart and Lothrop Lane to manage the replacement of undersized pipes on those two streets, which is complicated by the narrowness of the streets.

The project, said McNabb, also includes repairing the leaking water main under the bridge at Cat Dam on Nichols Road to restore an important distribution loop, improving drainage between Hammond Ave. and Locust Road, and replacing undersized water valves at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Doane Street, which will improve water pressure on Doane Street.

Ledge removal is rocky issue for DiNero's expansion plans

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Part of DiNero's expansion plans include the popular dining spot's parking lot. Everyone agrees the existing spaces are small and the traffic pattern could stand improvement.

So the Hull Street restaurant wants to remove ledge to the rear of the lot so the parking area can be expanded and traffic pattern redesigned.

But there's a lot of ledge to be removed, and that's where the question comes in.

The Zoning Board of Appeals says no more than 10 cubic feet can be removed without a variance, unless the removed ledge is used on-site. The tests for a variance are difficult to meet.

The restaurant plans to remove a substantial amount of ledge – in some 40 feet, totaling about 2,700 cubic yards – to make way for the new parking lot.

Attorney Greg Sullivan, speaking for the restaurant, disputes the proposed ledge removal doesn't comply with the bylaw because no more material would be displaced than necessary to install the parking lot.

But regardless, he said, if the Zoning Board determined the removed ledge must stay on site, that's what DiNero's would do.

"Either way we would install the added parking spaces," Sullivan said during a public hearing on the issue earlier this month.

The restaurant plans to remove about 2,700 cubic yards of ledge to make way for the new parking lot.

The current parking lot has 36 spaces – more than the 31 needed [one for every three seats, under the bylaw], but the existing lot is congested because the spaces are undersized. The restaurant, which seats 70, wants to reconfigure the proposed expanded parking lot to accommodate 39 roomier spaces (48 with stacked valet parking on site).

Sullivan said the expanded lot would have a positive effect on the neighborhood because fewer customers would feel the need to park along Hull Street.

"With an expanded lot, we believe everyone would be able to fit," he said.

A three-foot green buffer would also be installed between the parking area and the street, along with a redesigned entrance and exit that would improve traffic flow and enhance safety.

"We believe the lot would enhance the neighborhood," Sullivan said.

But restaurant abutters are concerned if the ledge is removed, the drop-off from the edge would be a safety hazard even though DiNero's would install a six-foot, chain-link fence.

James Reichardt, 3 Grace Drive, a direct abutter who has three young children, is worried about safety and also noise from a parking lot that would be closer to his property line.

John Fairchild, who lives in a new house off Jerusalem Road, said he would be the most affected by the expanded parking lot. He questioned whether using the removed ledge on site was possible.

He said the existing ledge, which has some vegetation, provides a natural buffer for the neighborhood.

DiNero's also wants to expand the restaurant building to accommodate an additional 23 seats and add signage, both of which may require zoning relief.

The Zoning Board has closed the hearing and taken the matter under advisement.

Little League fields ready

But no names yet

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

They may not have names yet, but the ball fields being constructed at the old gravel pits off North Main Street are scheduled for completion this weekend.

"The fields are supposed to be done this week, by Saturday," said Mark DeGiacomo, president of the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association. "The sprinkler system will be in, the sod and hydroseeding will be done, and the fences will be up."

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association's initial plan to fund part of the project through naming rights was met with opposition from the Board of Selectmen. The selectmen felt that it would go against the town's tradition of naming municipal parks and buildings after prominent Cohasset residents from the past. The Red Lion Inn contributed $50,000 and asked for the right to name the three-field complex, through community input or possibly a contest and two residents pledge $25,000 in the hopes that they would be able to name individual fields.

"Right now, the Little League, the town and selectmen are discussing a compromise that we put forward," said DeGiacomo. "I'm confident that we will reach an agreement."

Regardless of the naming situation, the project – which will total more than $600,000 at final tally – is coming to fruition.

"I think it has been a fantastic project," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "I thin kit has been a very good process. The contractor has done a very good job. I am very excited to see the first game on that field next year."

DeGiacomo agreed wholeheartedly.

"It's going to be a major attraction in Cohasset for many years to come," said DeGiacomo. "It's wonderful, the field looks even better than we had hoped. After two years of work, it is good to see us so close to completion."

The funding for the project came from a variety of sources. Town Meeting approved $200,000 towards it and the Community Preservation Committee asked Town Meeting to appropriate $100,000 of the CPC fund on the fields as well. The Little League has already spent $50,000 and plans to spend another $150,000 on construction elements such as dugouts and the concession stand.

"The Little League has already spent about $50,000 on various components, such as the foundations for the shed and the new concession stands," said DeGiacomo. "We bought some dirt and upgraded the fencing so that there is going to be a handsome black chain link fence which is more durable."

There is still work to be done, though, before the fields are ready for play next spring.

According to DeGiacomo, the CYBSA, continues to expand, and the new digs on North Main Street will give them a state-of-the-art home.

"I can't guarantee that we'll be the next Worcester in the Little League World Series, but I think that we will clearly have the best field in the area," said DeGiacomo. "The program is getting stronger and our enrollment is up every year."

Citizen brings forward grant option for 40B

It appears there may be grant money from the state for the town to help deal with the 40B process.

David Farrag of 31 Grace Drive brought the grant to the attention of the Board of Selectmen at its last meeting.

The grant provides $10,000 up front, with the possibility of subsequent $5,000 grants for a 40B facilitator.

"It's not like hiring a lawyer per se," said Farrag. "It wouldn't be just an advocate for the town, but it is going to help you shepherd through the process and avoid any pitfalls."

Town Manager Mark Haddad forwarded the information along to the appropriate committees.

"We have passed that along to the Board of Appeals and given them all the information," said Haddad. "We contacted the state for information on that process and now we are waiting. Any time you can get consultation, it is a good thing."

North Cohasset water restrictions

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Mandatory water restrictions are now in effect for North Cohasset, despite indications earlier this month that none would likely be imposed.

"We found it necessary because of the recent continuation of a statewide drought advisory and the recent dry spell, even though the level of Accord Pond is normal for this time of year," said Aquarion Water Company Operations Manager Eileen Commane.

Implementation of water restrictions means residents are allowed to perform outdoor watering on an odd-even (house number) basis between 6 and 9 p.m. only. That means odd-numbered homes and businesses may water on odd-numbered days, and even-numbered ones on even-numbered days.

Conservation tips are available by visiting aquarionwater.com

For further information, call 800-928-3734.

The water company serves customers in Hingham, Hull, and North Cohasset. [The rest of Cohasset is served by the Cohasset Water Department, which has not imposed mandatory water restrictions].

Conservation tips are available by visiting aquarionwater.com.

The water company will continue to monitor the situation closely to see if additional conservation measures are deemed necessary. Those could include mandatory restrictions or an outright ban on outdoor watering if conditions were to worsen significantly.

Enjoying life in the fast lane

Grew into a life-long obsession that is, but the rush of seeing just how fast you can go in a quarter-mile is well-worth it.

"When they call you up through staging, you put your helmet on, you put your fire jacket on and you strap yourself in," said Thayer. "You sit in the seat and just take a deep breath. Once you cross that line and you are looking down the quarter-mile and you get up to what they call the water box and you do your burnout and your stage, you are focused. It's unbelievable how it feels. It could be a 100 degrees out, you could be sweating inside that suit, but it doesn't matter. When the lights come down, you throw it to the floor and you are just pushing your shifter forward, hitting the gears."

It is, according to Thayer, a world apart.

"As soon as you cross that line you are in a whole different world," said Thayer. "You're look down almost a mile track. A quarter-mile is a drag strip and its three-quarters of a mile to shut down. And you're looking at the far end of that, going as straight as an arrow and as fast as you want to go."

Which is very different from driving the big trucks at the DPW.

"It's funny, because you are chugging along in the big truck, and you get in a drag racer and 'Vroom' you're gone," said Thayer. "My car runs at 11.40 seconds at 118 miles per hour in the quarter-mile from a standing stop, to full acceleration. It's fun, especially when you start hitting the gears. It's a rush. I mean, you can go as fast as you want, as fast as the car can go and you don't get any tickets."

> "You can go as fast as you want, as fast as the car can go and you don't get any tickets."
> — Kenny Thayer

As if racing the car wasn't enough, Thayer is also responsible for making sure that his car can reach 118 mile per hour.

"I build my own car, I do all the maintenance on the car," said Thayer. "The drive train, which means the transmission and rear end is done by Tim Warden out of Pembroke, Mass. He helps me out with the car a lot. Scott Payne of General Auto Supply in Quincy who's a NAPA dealer, as well. Scott and his crew up there have been very helpful with all the odds and ends parts that I need. Then I have a friend of my, Donald Russo, who helps me with a lot of parts and we do a lot of technical talk back and forth between my car and his car. He'll ask questions, I'll ask questions, He'll say to me, 'What do you think of this, what do you think of that,' and I'll say, 'Well, no I don't think so, but try this.'

It is that camaraderie that attracts Thayer to the sport.

"What really draws me to the sport is meeting all the people," said Thayer. "You do something everyday (working) but when you go up there it is different. You're always thinking, what can I do to make the car better, or faster, but it is the people who draw me there. There's a lot of nice people out there, a lot of nice people. And when something breaks on your car, they are the first ones to walk over there and say 'What do you need? How can we get you back on track again, hey we've got this, or we've got this."

Those friendships extend beyond the track, as does the willingness to help out others.

"A year ago, I did a program for South Shore Vocational Technical school," said Thayer. "And I brought all my drag racing friends to the school and we ran 600 kids through a two-day program. We explained about drag racing, the benefits you get from working from a trade school, for instance electrical, mechanical, autobody, so a lot of that kind of relates into drag racing."

Thayer's technical experience as a mechanic has led to another role with in racing – as inspector.

"I'm also a certified technical inspector for IHRA, the International Hot Rod Association for the track," said Thayer. "I have a licensed card and a certificate and I can work at any sanctioned IHRA event, inspecting cars for safety stuff."

All in all, drag racing has been a great pastime for Thayer. He hastens to mention that it is a family sport, and has a couple of sons involved in drag racing to prove it. He also heaps compliments on the New England Dragway.

"Win or lose, just being at the track is great," said Thayer. "I have just as much fun racing, tech-ing, helping people out, just being there."

So the next time you are sitting in traffic on 3A behind a big DPW truck thinking just how slow that big green machine is, take pause. The guy in the truck just might be Kenny Thayer, who takes his weekend car from zero to 118 miles per hour in a little over 11 seconds. He most definitely feels your pain.

Rte. 228 tie-ups go with the territory

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The repaving and reconstruction of Route 228 in Hingham may seem like a traffic nightmare to some South Shore motorists, but delays are to be expected with a project of such magnitude in a highly traveled area.

> "The wait time varies depending on the amount of traffic.."
> — Joseph Stigliani, Hingham DPW superintendent

That's the message from Joseph Stigliani, Hingham Department of Public Works Superintendent.

Stigliani has had some calls about traffic back-ups during the Route 228 project, but there are only two alternatives, he noted — either closing down one lane and having traffic alternate or detouring a lane of cars.

"Either option causes delays, particularly alternating traffic," he said. "We need to weigh the pros and cons. Detours keep the traffic moving, but they impact side roads. Sometimes they're not possible."

Still, "good progress" is being made with the project, according to Stigliani.

"It's tough with so much going on, including work on the Route 3A bridge," he said. "But we couldn't delay the Route 228 project. It's been in the works for a long time, and we just don't ask the state to hold off once they've proceeded."

To avoid hitting snags, Stigliani suggests motorists find their own alternate routes.

"Otherwise, they'll find themselves waiting in line," he said. "The police department is doing a good job moving vehicles, and there hasn't been a lot of confusion. It's not like people don't know where to go with all the signs and police details."

Stigliani recommends motorist allow themselves more time during the construction period, which could wrap up before the July 2003 deadline.

"The wait time varies depending on the amount of traffic," he said. "We have to do what we feel is right. It goes with the territory."

The time frame for Phase II of the project, which includes Route 228 from Merrymount Road to Queen Ann's Corner, will be addressed at a later date. A number of issues remain to be resolved in that area.

A decision was made two years ago to segment the job into two parts in order to expedite the work.

Hingham has spent $600,000 on design plans, with Massachusetts Highway Department paying for the rest of the approximately $2.4 million project.

It's back to school time again

job. There has been lots of cooperation and lots of help from all constituencies in town."

Supt. Edward Malvey said that schools are ready for the incoming students. Projected figures place the number of Cohasset students for this year at 1,423. That would be about a 5 percent increase of last year's total of 1,345 students.

"Our most difficult year was last year," said Malvey. "Just picture someone coming into your home and disrupting your peace and quiet, but we settled right in. The students and staff are ready, I don't expect any negative impact. Culture shock hit with last year, but everyone is ready for this year. Students may have to go in different door and circle campus differently, but it's not going to impact us. We're ready for it."

The school department is taking the busing contract back in-house this year, which could present problems, but Malvey is confident that the school department is prepared.

"We're under control with that," said Malvey. "We have some back-up plans in place. Over the next couple of months it will all smooth out."

Rob Spofford, chairman of the School Building Committee, also thinks that the construction will have a minimal affect of the schools.

"From the Building Committee perspective they will be safe and efficient areas for the children," said Spofford. "Both of the schools, Deer Hill and the middle-high school are about to enter the next phases of the project. The students will be operating in areas of new construction."

Spofford credited the hard work of the town in general as the reason the construction process has gone so smoothly.

"We've worked hard, the town manager has worked hard, the superintendent has worked hard, the building committee has worked hard," said Spofford. "It's very exciting to see the final project, and see what our tax dollars are really doing – building wonderful facilities."

Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan is excited by the progress he has seen.

"Well, the building looks fantastic with the renovations that have been completed," said Callahan. "The construction will continue areas where the children will not be. The classrooms look good, the teachers are ready, compared to what it looked like last year, it's very bright, and clean, and new."

He is, however, looking forward to getting back to normal in January.

"It's been a long time and it puts a burden on the classroom teacher, having to pack and have everything out of there at the end of the school year last year," said Callahan. "But the contractor got it done. There might be bumps as we go through and finish up, but the school will be substantially ready."

School traffic plans

Supt. Edward Malvey also provided the Mariner with the construction traffic plans for the Deer Hill and middle-high school.

For the Deer Hill Elementary School:

Parent drop-off/pick-up for students is in the front parking lot area;
Bus drop-off/pick-up is in the rear parking area.

For the Middle -High School:

1. Follow the same procedures as last year – Buses to the left of the driveway, cars to the right of the driveway.

Health program gets cash injection

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Two part-time elementary school health teachers received a temporary reprieve from losing their jobs after the School Committee voted to fund their positions on a interim basis, while it searches for funding for this year.

The teachers, Judy Wilson from the Joseph Osgood School and Jane Gregory of the Deer Hill School are in danger of losing their jobs because Beacon Hill cut the comprehensive school education budget. Both positions, at a cost of $28,000, were completely paid for by the health protection grant, which derived its money from the cigarette tax.

"For right now it is on a contingency basis," said School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn. "I think we made that clear to everybody involved. This buys them some time and it buys us some time to sift through the budget."

The most likely option is to ask for emergency funding at the Fall Special Town Meeting.

"For that kind of money, we would have to request it from the Special Town Meeting," said School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo. "Whether that is in addition to the $100,000 or whether it can be rolled into the $100,000, we'll have to see once the school year starts up." [Town Meeting under-funded the school budget last spring, expecting to seek up to $100,000 if needed from the fall Special Town Meeting after the state aid figures were clear].

Michael Gill, the school district's health education coordinator, was excited by the committee's decision.

> "You can't say it is important and then in the next breath say we can't fund it. You can't operate that way."
> — Supt. Edward Malvey

"I'm absolutely thrilled," said Gill. "It's a program we have been developing for over 20 years, so it is good that we are able to, hopefully, keep it going. I'm confident that we are going to be able to get through this year."

DeGiacomo felt that the health education aspect of the curriculum was too important to just let die.

"I think we all understand the importance of health programs at the school for all ages," said DeGiacomo. "Michael Gill has done a terrific job and the two teachers that have been affected have also made significant contributions to the school system."

Superintendent Edward Malvey was unhappy that funding was cut.

"It's like someone on medication or intravenous fluids, although not that extreme," said Malvey. "All of the sudden you can't continue with it and someone pulls it away from you. It's insanity. Health education deals with critical issues, growth and development in particular. You can't say it is important and then in the next breath say we can't fund it. You can't operate that way."

Even beyond the value of the program itself, cutting the program at this point in time could have other ramifications.

"Since this came out at the 11th-hour and they are two very valuable teachers, we are going to try to come up with the money to keep it going this year," said Malvey. "Because it is so late, it could have a domino effect on the scheduling."

According to Gill, the program deals with issues ranging from substance abuse to creating positive behavioral habits.

"I think that we will be able to (get through this year) and it will buy us some time for next year," said Gill. "Hopefully we can get that grant money back."

School Dept. to run buses

made it clear that potential bidders were not required to use the town's bus fleet, but even this was not enough to entice a company to make an offer. The main reason cited by the prospective contractors, according to Supt. Edward Malvey, was the size of Cohasset, which runs only five bus routes.

The administrative burden will once again fall on the superintendent's office, but this time it will have the help of business manager, Ivan Klimko. The position was not in place the last time the school operated the buses. Ideally, the town would like to hire six drivers.

"We have three drivers, that we really believe have committed and we have five runs to make," said Klimko. "If those three people say yes, I have found a fourth driver who has already said yes and we have an agreement with a company, Totman Enterprises of Scituate, that will do the fifth run."

According to Klimko that agreement is a temporary stopgap.

"They are going to cover one run for us for three months," said Klimko. "In the meantime, we'll try to do the total transition."

The town is also in negotiations with Totman Enterprises and Ingle Bus Services in order to cover the early afternoon athletic trips.

"From 2 p.m. to 4 p.m., it is absolutely critical, because we can't do it ourselves," said Klimko. "Our five buses are on the road (taking students home from school) and we need more for our early afternoon athletic events."

Once the after-school runs have been completed, the town's buses would be available again for late afternoon or night travel. The town would also use its own buses for weekend events.

"Having the business manager in place gives us a little flexibility," said Flynn. "It used to just be Supt. Malvey running it. But Ivan will be more involved, he understands a lot of the issues behind transportation."

Malvey is confident that in the long run, the school-run service will be a benefit to the town.

"In financial terms, it will create and additional administrative responsibility for us," said Malvey. "In a well-ordered world it would probably be better if we had a private service for it, but I think that we can get it up and running and grow it so that it will be better financially and administratively (in the long run), but it is going to take some doing."

The town currently owns five buses, which would leave them without a back-up. The old back-up was lost to an accident. With the service back in-house, the school department is considering an article to buy a school bus for this fall's Special Town Meeting.

DEAN'S LIST

Some fantastic news about two Cohasset residents.

Victoria Hurley, who is majoring in computer science, and Sarah Kidder, a biology major, have been named to the dean's list at Union College in Schenectady, N.Y. In order to be named to the dean's list at Union, a student must have maintained a minimum overall index of 3.35 our of 4.0. Great job.

COLLEGE BOUND

Marc L. Musco, who is the son of Lynne Musco and the late Louis Musco of Cohasset, will attend Green Mountain College in Poultney, Vt. this fall. I hope that we will hear more from this sports oriented young man.

THEATRE PROGRAM

Holly Dinsmore, who attends Cohasset High School, has successfully completed the Summer 2002 Theatre Institute at the State University of New York at Oswego. Holly, who is from Cohasset, spent two weeks on the Oswego State campus immersed in an intense theatre program that included classes in movement, stage combat, voice, speech and text, monologue, and acting. In addition, the program included a trip to Shaw Festival, in Niagara-on-the-Lake, Canada to attend performances. Holly earned three transcripted credit hours from SUNY Oswego. This must have been a fantastic experience for you Holly.

Student nominates her art teacher for national award

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

At just over 5 feet tall with salt and pepper hair and a pair of Birkenstocks on her feet, Osgood School art teacher Betsy Ogden thinks that it is pretty comical that she is a finalist for the Barbie Arts Teacher Award.

"It's a humorous title for a gray-haired art teacher," said Ogden. "But maybe I'll get a makeover."

While the title may be humorous, the award truly is an honor. Presented by the Entertainment Industry Foundation's National Arts Education Initiative, of which Mattel is a founding sponsor, the national competition generated more than 2,500 essays from students on the impact that art teachers have had on their lives. Mattel, which produces the Barbie doll, is creating an art teacher-styled Barbie doll to help promote the contest.

Osgood student Whitney Jaffe wrote a one-page essay nominating Ogden, which judges selected as one of 20 regional finalists. Already, the award has garnered the Osgood school a $5,000 grant and $4,000 in art supplies from Rose Art. Jaffe, herself, received a $100 gift from Mattel. The overall winner, to be selected this fall, receives an additional $10,000 grant and a trip to either New York City or Los Angeles for the announcement event.

"I'm very excited about winning the award," said Ogden. "It was very sweet of Whitney to write the essay about me and I'm excited for her that she won, and won for us all really."

A quick trip to the art room upstairs at the Osgood School, though, seems to indicate that Whitney may be on to something here. The walls are decorated solely with the work of her students and each project exudes color and charisma that is unmistakably from the minds of children. That is not to say it is child-like. A level of sophistication and awareness abounds.

"Every morning, when you come in, she says 'Good morning artists!'" said Whitney. "Which is nice, because we are just kids and usually kids aren't artists."

Whitney's mother Susan Jaffe is amazed by the hold that Ogden has on the class.

"What is probably most remarkable about Betsy Ogden is the respect that she both gives to the students and commands from the students," said Jaffe. "She is not just focused on technique, she opens up the work through the old masters. They create their own Monet 'Waterlilies'-type paintings, teaching the students techniques and exposing them to Monet while they think that they are just getting to play with sponges."

According to Whitney, there is no pressure to recreate the work of the master, only to create within themselves.

Osgood student Whitney Jaffe wrote a one-page essay nominating Ogden, which judges selected as one of 20 regional finalists.

"She showed us a picture of a 'Starry, starry night' (by Vincent Van Gogh)," said Whitney. "But you could make it your own way. You paint the background, and put stars on it and draw houses. It's in your own hands."

Whitney took that same attitude towards writing the nomination essay.

"Thomson (Whitney's sister) was going to do it and I wanted to put my effort in," said Whitney. "It was fun writing my essay it's make up your own mind (about what you want to write)."

That type of cross-curriculum application of knowledge is cultivated in Ogden's classroom.

"I encourage the student to look outside themselves," said Ogden. "Community projects are really what I am interested in, along with projects that go along with the curriculum that they have in the classroom. It sort of makes that come alive for them."

In the biography she sent to the Entertainment Industry Foundation after receiving the awards, Ogden opens with a Chinese proverb.

" 'You tell me, and I forget, you show me and I see, you involve me and I remember.'"

To say that Ogden involves her students in their own learning is an understatement.

For her community project this year, in response to Sept. 11, her third graders made American Flag tiles, her second graders made U.S. Flag and peace pins, and her first graders made stationary with the Statue of Liberty or U.S. Flag on them. As if dealing with incomprehensible and scary issues through a medium like art wasn't enough, she then had the children sell them for a dollar apiece and donated the money to the New York Relief Fun Educational Program. Last year, each student made a mitten and then paired up with another student to make a pair. The pairs were then sent of to a homeless shelter.

Art teacher Betsy Ogden is a finalist for the Barbie Arts Teacher Award, thanks to an essay by one of her students, Whitney Jaffe.

Again, though, Ogden deflected the praise.

"Make sure you mention the Parent School Organization, they were a lot of help," said Ogden.

Whitney is now a newly-minted nine-year-old and is about to enter third-grade in Mrs. Elcott's class. She is anxiously waiting to hear if Mrs. O, as the students call her, wins the national award. If the quality of her essay is any indication, Ogden is in good shape.

"Mrs. Ogden lets us to lots of hands-on stuff," reads Whitney's essay. "Like turtles we put-together with 13 sections from clay stamps she made. We drew pictures of the Big Dig in Boston so that we can compare our drawings to the real thing. For the Olympics, we made pictures of ourselves winning something. Mrs. Ogden told us we were all winners."

Monet, Van Gogh, the Big Dig, and the Olympics. Not bad for an second-grade art class.

Bittersweet time

The Staples' TV commercial in which a Dad is positively gleeful as he buys back-to-school supplies for his two glum children is good for a laugh.

It's true that hurried parents, especially those who work full-time and are faced with daycare issues in the summer, are happy to see September roll around again.

While others, who enjoyed two-plus months of lazy days with no set schedule, must readjust to hectic mornings, alarm clocks, after-school activities and homework.

In either case, while our children are school-aged we don't always appreciate that those days are numbered. We get caught up in going here and there, and everywhere – often compressing as much into our available time as possible. That's especially true for those of us who can't be stay-at-home Moms or Dads, and must pack all the homework help, youth sports and music lessons into our "free time."

Then seemingly before we know it, we're attending our last high school or college graduation and we start communicating with our children by email. The only contact we have with school buses is when we're stuck behind one on our way to work.

The summers come and go, and the patter of little feet, smelly ice hockey bags, and sandy Mickey Mouse beach towels are all gone. When we see Moms with coffee cups in hand, waiting at the end of the street for the school bus until it collects their first-grader or Kindergartner, we're a little envious.

Where did the years go? Did we do it right? Did we spend enough time just kicking up our heels with our kids? Did we lie down on the grass together and figure out which clouds looked like dinosaurs or elephants? Did we play cards at night as a family? Or, was it all one big blur?

We always thought of September as the "beginning" of the year for our family. The new school year provided a time to reassess, plan and prioritize. With new teachers, new schedules and new interests – it was an exciting time. Still, those elementary, middle school, high school and college years, all went by much too fast.

So as the pace picks up, try to keep everything in perspective. Enjoy these moments while you can and make some happy memories.

GREENBUSH QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Where and for how long will horns or whistles being sounded when a train is traveling through our towns?

The entire Greenbush Line is a "quiet corridor" meaning there will be no routine whistles sounded. As a result, grade crossings will include medians as a safety measure to prevent motorists from crossing over when the gate is down. Whistles will be sounded in the case of an emergency or if there are workers on the tracks.

The Greenbush Line will be the only "quiet corridor" in the state, although there are some "quiet towns" on other lines.

If you have a Greenbush question that others may be interested in, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com or call the Greenbush hotline at 781-682-6350.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

40B consultant

TO THE EDITOR:
Mr. Chittick, Chair
Zoning Board of Appeals
Town of Cohasset

Dear Mr. Chittick,

I am writing to you concerning AvalonBay's 40B project scheduled for review by the Zoning Board of Appeals, Sept. 16. I recently attended an information meeting held by Cohasset Action, the newly-formed grassroots group opposed to Avalon's project as currently proposed.

It became clear to me at that meeting that regardless of one's opinion about the merits of the project, the town of Cohasset should allocate significant financial resources to the review process, such that complex technical questions can be fully understood and aired out during the review process. I urge you, as chairman of the Zoning Board of Appeals, to request from the Board of Selectmen the necessary financial resources to hire any consultants that could aid the ZBA in its review process.

I understand that the role of the ZBA is to review the proposal in the context of applicable Massachusetts General Laws and that the ZBA, especially in the light of Chapter 40B "anti-snob zoning" regulations, has many limitations placed upon it. It is my understanding, however, that the ZBA has a once in a lifetime opportunity to work with the developers, so that if the project does go through, it is one that Cohasset can live with. In order to work most efficaciously with the developer, I respectfully urge you to request that the town hire any and all consultants that can aid the ZBA in shaping the project in the best interests of the town of Cohasset.

Runway is at political crossroad

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

The airlines overextended and hung their fate on inflated business fares.

I've been helping send out a fundraising appeal to protect the South Shore from being a pressure valve for Massport jet pollution. We are in an interesting political moment. Massport pushed runway expansion hard during the economic bubble. It proposed that pollution go "over the water," i.e., the unsuspecting South Shore towns. The expansion has FAA approval, but the bubble has burst. The airlines overextended and hung their fate on inflated business fares. In the meantime, town governments, Bob Hedlund and Garrrett Bradley and many South Shore residents have become experts on aviation impacts. Now is the time to press our case in the courts and the media – that communities not be ravaged for the sake of an aviation industry that is itself in need of deep reconsideration. Citizens, pollution and noise experts, former EPA and Transportation officials, a former governor and key cities and towns found that Massport's environmental data and claims are not reliable enough to bet our futures on.

Many people are disturbed that Massport's plans to use the South Shore as a pollution dump will lower real estate values. Statistical studies support it, but the battle is grittier and more vital than that. The South Shore's fundamental value, monetary and otherwise, is quality of life. Everything we cherish is incompatible with round-the-clock jet noise and jet fuel combustion. Over two years, the Town of Hingham will have spent far less than the median price of a home in Massachusetts on the issue. Tens of thousands of hours of volunteer work have been invested in preparing the South Shore and its political leaders for the long-term fight. Last Friday, I went to a delightful fundraiser for the South Shore Jet Pollution Council in Hull. The "Hullapalooza" Music Festival dance party leads us into a new spirit of making the Logan impacts problem a seamless part of our long-term political and social life. Public and private funds and volunteer time are needed in the mix, as complements to political prowess.

Our goals are clear. 1.) The South Shore's established land uses have priority over jet operations. We have proposed routes to the FAA that protect the South Shore without hurting others. 2.) Any plans that significantly alter land use, public health, air and water quality, noise levels and property values belong before our elected officials, Planning Boards, Conservation Commissions, Zoning Boards and Boards of Health. 3.) We need to be where it is an advantage that the facts are on our side. We need the transparency and accountability of the courts.

Our real advantage, long term, is that Massport is trying to take from us something – our public health and our sense of place – that we can't afford to lose. A savvy, well-respected Hinghamite told me recently, "I don't think people realize this is a 'war of money!'" She said that when they do, they will rise to it. I am going back to addressing envelopes.

Do you approve of how the government has responded to the terrorist threat? What are your personal recollections of where you were on Sept. 11 and what you were feeling?

Signed responses and essays (of a reasonable length) may be sent to the Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043. They may also be emailed to mford@cnc.com. Fax to 781-741-2931. Youngsters in elementary school and older are also invited to give their thoughts. Responses will be published in the Sept. 12 issue of the Cohasset Mariner.

Swift loses zest for Corner Office

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Aug. 23

Not for the first time, and not for the last, it was suggested last week that while Acting Gov. Jane Swift decided not to run for a full term in her own right, she's apparently still out to remove "acting" from her job description.

Swift, it seems, has been spending an eyebrow-raising, headline-provoking number of days at her home in North Adams. This news comes after a summer when the drop off in energy and activity in the administration became obvious to everyone who works on Beacon Hill. The most direct evidence was the lack of fresh or dramatic strategies floated from the Corner Office as Commonwealth officialdom struggled with a balance sheet that went from a $500 million surplus to a $3 billion deficit in 12 months.

This frequent absence from Boston continues a syndrome that began in mid-March, when political reality drew Mitt Romney into the race and Swift out of the picture. After her tearful withdrawal from the race, in a practical sense she really wasn't governor anymore. She was the person holding the office — and to be sure, doing her best to solve the budget problems — during the campaign to choose her successor.

That campaign waged full-tilt last week, even though most of the people who will decide it probably spent more time cursing the Red Sox bullpen or wondering if it was time to tan the other side yet than pondering who's got the best approach to stabilizing the Massachusetts public pension fund.

Still, Romney unveiled a new program to deal with crime, including the end of lifetime judicial appointments and the posting of sex offender information online; Warren Tolman won his first significant endorsement, from the Sierra Club; Senate President Thomas Birmingham pounded the airwaves to convince voters who are paying attention that his experience makes him ideally prepared to be governor; and Robert Reich said he will put his religion first, and not campaign on Yom Kippur, Sept. 16, even though it falls the day before the Democratic primary.

Swift once thought she'd be in the center of the campaign clamor come August. Instead, she found herself in the quiet of the Governor's Council chamber, telling reporters: "I have, like many other governors, at times been present at cabinet meetings, and at other times you communicate with them in different ways."

One has to struggle not to empathize with Swift's seeming loss of focus. You'd have to not be human not to lose some zest for your job after going through what she did in March, and despite what you may have heard on talk radio, Swift is human. Still, at this point, reporters, lawmakers, staffers and bureaucrats alike are waiting for Nov. 5, Election Day, and then Jan. 2, Inauguration Day, for the government to start moving again. A lot of people suspect Swift is too.

All that said, it was hardly as if everyone was absent from the State House, and the passage of a $30-million-plus pending bill proved it.

One has to struggle not to empathize with Swift's seeming loss of focus.

• A bill to cover over-budget spending at state agencies passed the House last Thursday evening. The lawmakers shepherding its progress weren't available to give a final bottom line. The bill filed weeks earlier by Swift totaled about $31 million. Lawmakers met behind closed doors for most of last Thursday and in the early evening they emerged and added millions of dollars in new spending authorizations to the bill, as well as dozens of outside sections. It all went down at an informal session skipped by the vast majority of House and Senate members.

• The Massachusetts office to promote re-use of contaminated urban sites had won praise in its professional sphere, but that wasn't enough to immunize it from the effects of a $2 billion budget problem. Environmentalists and former officials at the office expressed dismay.

• Just like the homeowners now refinancing to trim mortgage costs or make home improvements, the state money management bureaucracy was again buoyed by the new low interest rates available as it retired higher-interest bonds. The latest refunding will cut future debt service costs by about $32 million.

• A member of the Governor's Council urged Acting Gov. Jane Swift to begin filling judgeships and clerk magistrate positions, noting she may have as many as 45 judicial appointments to make and should avoid a "feeding frenzy" in the final weeks of her tenure later this year.

Councilor Mary-Ellen Manning said that "in so far as possible," Swift should make her judicial appointments known before the November elections to give candidates for governor time to be heard on nominees. Through a spokesman, Swift refused to be pinned down to any timetable and said she won't rush or delay nominees. Some of the posts have been open for more than two years. Swift has made just five picks this year.

• John Moscardelli, a Boston lawyer, never got to attend a Massachusetts Turnpike Authority board meeting the first time he was named, but he will now. Swift appointed Moscardelli to the newly expanded board Aug. 21. A new law increased the number of turnpike board members to five from three. Swift still needs to name a member from MetroWest under the law's stipulations. Board chairman Matthew Amorello said the four-member board wouldn't meet until a fifth member is named and only Swift knows when that will be. So once again, the turnpike board is dysfunctional, at least temporarily.

• Some rates are quadrupling under a legal settlement between the state and ambulance companies, adding $19 million annually to the Medicaid program's already exploding budget. Ambulance companies summoned to help sick or injured Massachusetts residents covered under Medicaid will receive between $141 and $387 per trip, plus mileage charges, depending on the nature of services provided to patients in ambulances. The settlement was disclosed in the state's latest statement to bond holders.

• Members of the Public Health Council said Massachusetts residents struggling with drug and alcohol problems will be well-served by a new licensing requirement the board approved Aug. 20. It stipulates that unless exempted, anyone providing substance abuse counseling services must get a state license, certifying they've received competent training to help those in need. Council members said the rule will bring a higher degree of professionalism and, hopefully, success to the field.

Little League World Series

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Little League baseball has been pulled back from the brink — at least in these parts — and it took a team of 11- and 12-year-olds from Worcester, of all places, to do it.

I thought for a while there that the 56-year-old World Series of the prepubescent set was about to sink without a trace under the sheer weight of scandal, brewed up, of course, by the adults who run the games.

The Worcester team, named for Jesse Burkett, a member of Baseball's Hall of Fame from the 19th century who lived in that city, changed all that with a stroke of their aluminum bats, and if they didn't win the title, they gave us something to cheer about.

Little League public relations has fallen on hard times lately.

Last year, the problem was Danny Almonte, who pitched a no-hitter for the Rolando Paulino Little League All Stars from the Bronx, only to be forced to give it all back when it was discovered that he was really 14 years old, which is why 12-year-olds had trouble hitting his fastball.

Little League officials had to go all the way to the little town of Moca in the Dominican Republic for a copy of the hand-written birth certificate that showed he was born in 1987, not in 1989, as it said after his father got through tampering with it.

On the eve of this year's series, even as the youngsters were arriving in South Williamsport, Penn., the team from Harlem, N.Y., was accused of recruiting three of its best players from outside its district. The charge was investigated and proved to be false.

Also investigated was a charge that two coaches of a Little League team in Kearney, N. J., had encouraged their kids to throw a game to their cross-town rivals to give the rivals a better chance to move up in the regional playoffs.

Controversy is no stranger to Little League.

A team from Zamboanga City in the Philippines had to be disqualified in 1992 after winning the World Series when league organizers confessed that their team was really a national All-Star team with eight players from outside the Zamboanga City limits.

A team from Tainan City on Taiwan raised eyebrows when it cruised to the world title in 1973 by overwhelming a team of American Army brats from Germany, 18-0; Tampa, Fla., 27-0; and Tucson, Ariz., 12-0, without allowing a hit in all three games.

When a team from Kao Hsiung on Taiwan won again in 1975, drubbing New Haven, Conn., 16-0; Tallmadgee, Ohio, 11-0; and Red Bluff, Calif., 12-1, the powers that be in Williamsport banned foreign teams from further appearances in the World Series.

"A World Series with only an American team participating can hardly be a World Series," said the chairman of the Taiwanese Baseball Association logically.

"If you can't beat 'em, ban 'em," wrote American sportswriters, or derisive words to that effect.

The ban lasted one year.

Taiwan was back in 1976 and won five straight championships, but when Little League officials announced they would strictly enforce residency rules in 1997, Taiwan, winner of 16 World Series titles in 28 years, quietly withdrew from the tournament.

Hurry! Hurry! Hurry!

GOOD VIBES

BOB WHITNEY

"Hurry is not of the devil; hurry is the devil," noted psychologist Carl Jung had said.

At a recent Chamber of Commerce business breakfast, I was sitting next to a lovely looking and very successful woman business executive. In the course of conversation, she proceeded to tell me of her family life: SUV car-pooling, club soccer practices and games, basketball workouts, swim team, private violin lessons, church bake sales, PTO and an endless list of trips and activities that would make your head spin. The pace of her life and her family's was frantic.

She could tell from my body language that I was getting exhausted by listening to this list of activities. She paused, looked me in the eye and then offered out loud, "Do you think I'm going too fast? I just don't know how to slow down!"

She was obviously reaching out for some advice and I couldn't resist the opportunity to share my thoughts about her bout with the dreaded "hurry syndrome."

We are rich in things, but very poor in time. One of the great illusions in these times is that hurrying will buy us more time.

I paused for a moment and then simply offered, "You must aggressively eliminate hurry from your every day life."

She smiled and offered her thanks and then quickly turned away and started a conversation with a nearby female acquaintance.

I have concluded for quite some time that the life we lead and our physical and mental well being are dependent upon how successful we are at eliminating the hurry in our daily living. For most of us, we have become too distracted, rushed and preoccupied with "things," that we are settling for a lesser quality of living—we are skimming our lives. We are rich in things, but very poor in time. One of the great illusions in these times is that hurrying will buy us more time.

Hurry is the enemy within—a struggle to accomplish more or participate in more events in less and less time, all in the face of opposition, real or imagined from others. But why do so many of us continue this sprint to hurry when in actuality, we would be much better off seeking less?

How do we remove ourselves from the fast lane? How can we slow down?

• Schedule daily blocks of quiet time for yourself—away from others.

• Reflect upon those people who you are most grateful for—a collage of gratitude.

• Spend time helping others who are less fortunate.

• Share love and laughter with your spouse and friends.

Take the time to observe a regular rhythm of withdrawal from activities, events and routines. Enjoy the peace of solitude and the love of those closest to your heart. Eliminate the hurry from your life and cherish the time.

Tiny hummingbirds — jewels on the wing

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Hummingbirds are truly remarkable. They resemble miniature helicopters. They are the smallest birds in the world. They have been called "Jewel birds". Their heart beats 1,260 times a minute while active. Their wings beat at a rate of up to 80 beats per second. There are about 325 species of them in the world, 18 species appear in North America, but only the Ruby-throated Hummingbird is found east of the Mississippi.

Hummingbirds can hover, fly backwards, sideways, straight up or down and even upside down. This is because, unlike other birds, their wings can move in a figure-eight pattern. They are known to be able to fly at least 27 miles per hour, but when the wind is right, they probably can go close to 60 miles per hour.

Hummers have relatively long bills, frequently decurved. Their tongues are very long and can be extended well beyond their bill. These tongues are grooved, tubular at the end, and have a brushlike structure at the tip. Nectar from flowers is not sucked up as through a straw, but moved along the tongue through capillary action. Ruby-throated Hummingbirds often feed on sap flowing from holes drilled by Yellow-bellied Sapsuckers in birch trees.

Nectar supplies their carbohydrate needs, but for protein they eat small insects and insect eggs. Some they glean from leaves and branches, some they "hawk" by darting from a perch into a swarm of tiny insects flying by. They must feed every few minutes all day long to keep going. When the weather is chilly, or if food is in short supply, hummingbirds can lower their metabolism at night, achieving a state of torpor, thus needing less food. In this state their heart only beats around 50 times a minute, and their body temperature decreases by about half.

One thing people notice right away about hummingbirds is the iridescent plumage on their head and gorget, which is the area of feathers covering their throat. Iridescence occurs because of the way feathers are structured, allowing light to be reflected only at certain angles. This is why the colors of hummingbird feathers sometimes look black instead of bright red or purple or green. Males are more apt to have brightly colored gorgets than females.

Iridescence occurs because of the way feathers are structured, allowing light to be reflected only at certain angles.

Such a tiny bird constructs a tiny nest. The female builds its nest on a branch, using soft materials such as hair, rootlets, feathers, and thistle or dandelion down. Spider webs hold it together and lichen is put all around the outside, helping to hide it from view. Usually two eggs are laid, which hatch about two weeks later. Babies are fed by regurgitation.

Hummingbird feeders come in a wide variety of sizes and shapes, designed to feed one bird or as many as six. Because hummers are drawn to bright colors, especially red, feeders usually have some sort of red decoration on them. It is not good to put red dye in the fluid, however, because of possible toxicity. A mixture of boiled sugar water in the ratio of one part sugar to four or five parts water is best. Sweeter than that can cause liver damage. Honey ferments faster than sugar and develops a fungus that can be deadly to the birds. The solution should be changed at least once a week and the feeders cleaned with a 10 percent bleach solution. Some people worry that if they keep their feeders up too late into the fall, hummingbirds will linger too long and succumb to cold temperatures. The trigger for migration is in the length of daylight, so feel free to keep your feeders up as long as the birds come.

Hummingbirds defend their feeding territories aggressively and will chase away birds, even much larger ones, with great vigor. Planting red or brightly colored flowers, especially tubular ones, is a good way to attract hummingbirds. Their method of feeding accomplishes pollination, another asset. Beebalm, salvia, trumpet vine, columbine and jewelweed are just a few of their favorite plants.

Hummingbirds like other birds are faced with hazards. Of course, they must contend with bad weather. Some drown while migrating over water. They can get caught in spider webs. Fish and frogs have been known to pick them out of the air as they fly over water. Although they are fast flyers and good at maneuvering, there is some predation by larger birds.

A few North American hummingbirds winter over in the southwestern, or even southeastern, part of the United States, but most spend the winter south of the Mexican border. Males usually migrate before the females. By doubling their weight first, Ruby-throated Hummingbirds manage to cross the Gulf of Mexico, a distance of some 600 miles, without being able to stop for food along the way.

There are even special days and events staged in honor of hummingbirds. Sept. 7 will be International Hummingbird Day in Abita Springs, Louisiana. The 14th Annual Hummer/Bird Celebration will take place in Rockport and Fulton, Texas Sept. 12-15.

In this area, identification of any hummingbird is easy, because except for extremely rare vagrants, we only see Ruby-throated Hummingbirds. Any confusion is usually with large Sphinx Moths. Also young male ruby-throats can be mistaken for females, since they do not develop their red feathers until later. It sometimes takes a while to find the best place to put a feeder or the best combination of flowers, but when you do, you will be in for a treat.

School board backs retirement incentive

Selectmen asked to revisit issue for custodian

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The School Committee has given new life to school custodian Kevin Soule's desire to retire under the state's early retirement program..

Initially, under the recommendation of the school department and in accordance with the regulations of the early retirement program, the town decided not to offer the option to Group 1 employees, which includes the school maintenance workers. But last week, the School Committee voted unanimously to ask the Board of Selectmen to reconsider its decision to exclude Group 1 employees, opening the door for Soule's participation in the program. The town had already included two Group 4 retirement. Those retirements were slotted for firefighters, because they would be replaced by paramedics, which would allow the town to raise ambulance rates, more than covering the cost of the early retirements.

"The guy's been working for 35 years," said School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn. "The state put the early retirement option out there and I think it should be available to him."

Elizabeth Soule, Kevin's sister, sent letters to the school department and Board of Selectmen, asking that her brother's eligibility be reconsidered.

"Some towns didn't (adopt the legislation) at all," said Elizabeth Soule. "If they were going to do it, they should have done it fairly in the first place."

The program is intended for use as an alternative to layoffs for cash-strapped towns, ideally allowing early retirement to the individual and savings to the town by reducing workforce. But the legislation also allows the town to make moves that will benefit the town financially, under which the firefighter decision fell. The selectmen had the power to adopt the measure because it was enacted after the last town meeting and the deadline for acceptance was before the fall's Special Town Meeting.

After receiving Soule's letter, School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn approached Town Manager Mark Haddad about the possibility of the School Committee making a further recommendation to the selectmen.

If the Board of Selectmen decided to approve the inclusion of Soule into the program (Soule has the most years of creditable service of any Group 1 employee in town) it will cost the school department $7,000.

"The guy's been working for 35 years. The state put the early retirement option out there and I think it should be available to him."
— School Committee Chairman Richard Flynn

For Supt. Edward Malvey, the School Committee's decision to support Soule was the "decent thing to do."

"It was never anything I was personally opposed to," said Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey, noting the financial impact of having to hire a new employee. "But upon further consideration, I feel that it is the right thing to do."

Contacted last week, Selectman Tom Callahan felt confident that the town dealt with the issue properly.

"I think the board acted appropriately and we dealt with this out in the open," said Callahan. "Mark (Haddad) and Mike (Buckley, the town accountant) thoroughly researched the pros and cons of the financial benefits of what we are doing. And I think that there is a misconception out there that this law is just for anyone who wishes to retire early to retire early, and that is not what it is there for."

According to Malvey, the financial burden still exists, but the school department will have to absorb those costs.

"There is a liability on our part, because of the financial responsibility," said Malvey. "Had we known well in advance, we could have budgeted this in."

Flynn feels that despite the cost, Soule deserves the option to retire.

"It's going to cost us some money," said Flynn. "But I think that is part of the early retirement package. Kevin Soule was the most senior member (of Group 1) so that option would be available to him given his seniority. It worked out to his benefit and everybody is happy."

According to Haddad, the selectmen will take up the issue at their next meeting.

"It will be on the selectmen's agenda on Sept. 10," said Haddad.

Palmer talks about taxes, the economy

An experienced businessman with an extensive background in budgetary cost control and fiscal management, Nathaniel Palmer, who is running for state representative, discussed how he intended to use his background in a legislative capacity at a coffee attended by more than 70 local residents last week. He said current legislators seem lacking in the area of fiscal responsibility. Palmer cited the recent passage of a $3,300 per year tax specifically on seniors paying for nursing home care, while simultaneously spending hundreds of millions on wasteful initiatives, such as a convention center unable attract business.

"It is to outrageous to impose such a burden on the most vulnerable members of our community, yet still find money for such unnecessary items as the expansion of the Boston Convention Center," explains Palmer. "This tax was so cowardly and unnecessary, it serves only to demonstrate how far out of hand matters have gotten on Beacon Hill."

At the meeting Palmer laid out his legislative agenda formed on three principal areas: Community, Family and Economy. Palmer spoke of the importance of local control over such as issues as land development and education, the need for real consequences for dangerous criminals, and the opportunity for employment on the South Shore.

Palmer laid out a specific plan to encourage job growth on the South Shore which would add revenue to both state and local coffers, as well as reduce the significant social consequences we all face with the majority of South Shore families having to spend as many 30 hours a community to work.

Bradley names new campaign manager

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, held a successful open house this past week at his campaign headquarters. The headquarters is located at the Sons of Italy Hall on Route 3A at the corner of Kilby Street, just one-quarter mile from the Hingham Rotary.

"The campaign headquarters is the heart of our campaign," Bradley said. "I have met many wonderful people who have dropped by or called my headquarters to voice their concerns on issues like education, development, and taxes. I look forward to meeting and listening to all who come by to share their concerns with me."

Bradley also announced the hiring of Steve Burm as his campaign manager this week. Burm, a recent recipient of his masters degree in Business from Fitchburg State College, and his family are long time residents of Hingham.

Bradley was elected to the House of Representatives in 2000. During this first term, he has distinguished himself as a strong, independent voice for our district. Bradley has fought for critical local issues such as more local control over Chapter 40B developments, additional funding for the school building assistance program and improvements to our local infrastructure. He has also stood up to House leadership and supported the will of the voters by voting against a freeze in the income tax cut as well as against attempts to kill the voter approved Clean Elections Law. Bradley lives in Hingham with his wife, Heather, and their two daughters.

A place where everyone knows your name

Local residents own Hull nightspot

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Good music and dancing and a family atmosphere are only a few of the reasons regulars at the Sea Note music club in neighboring Hull say they return again and again.

The club at 159 Nantasket Ave., owned by Hingham residents Joe Phillips and Paula Dillon, incorporates some of the strong points (such as good service) — and leaves out all of the weaknesses (like using plastic glasses) — the couple experienced at other music establishments before buying the Sea Note eight years ago.

"It's one of the best spots on the South Shore," said Dennis Brundige of Hull, who has frequented the popular club for a couple of years.

The cover charge, ranging from $5 to $14, depending on the band, falls well below many other clubs, and there is no drink minimum.

"It's a pretty good bargain considering cover charges in Boston, parking, and the overall hassle," Dillon said.

The season runs from April to mid-December, with local, regional, and national groups featured. The Sea Note is open from April to mid-December Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m., with special shows on some Sundays.

Coming from different backgrounds — Phillips with Coast Guard and Dillon with social worker experience — the couple found they were both "into music."

"We've both loved music since childhood," Phillips said. "I've collected records since then."

His interest in music isn't surprising considering his mother was a singer with a band covering a four- or five-state area in the late 1930s and 1940s.

Initially, the couple wanted to open a club in Salem, but when that didn't work out, they kept looking.

Although Nantasket Beach wasn't their first choice, space was available there to open the Sea Note in a building that had housed clubs since the 1960s.

"We had been looking for so long that we thought we should give it a shot," Dillon said.

As it turns out, they couldn't have chosen a better place. The Sea Note has been a popular club since it opened eight years ago.

"As long as the crowd is happy and dancing, I'm happy," said Phillips.

In deciding they'd like to open a place of their own, the couple desired to offer an urban type of music club — "national and headline regional acts such as you find in Cambridge and Boston geared toward an older crowd, a place Joe and I would like to go to ourselves," Dillon said.

And that's exactly what they did. Customers range in age from 25 (although it's mostly an over-30 crowd) to ones like youthful and dapper "regular" James Hayward, 87, of Hingham, who was recently thrown a birthday party at the club.

"Nature just brought me here because of my love for the beach," he said. "It's a unique place because it draws people of all ages from different walks of life."

Dillon can't say enough about the classy gentleman.

"He's our mascot and can outdance all of us," she said with a smile. "The big part is that no one feels out of place, regardless of their age."

Two other birthday parties were hosted at the Sea Note during regular hours that week as well.

"We were actually giving cake away," Dillon said with a laugh.

Customers range from bikers to bankers, and there's a peaceful coexistence among those who frequent the club to have a good time, simply listen to "roots music," and those who dance the night away.

"The music has to be danceable. The Sea Note is very upbeat and comfortable, with a party atmosphere," Dillon said. "It's high energy but without trouble. There's a lot of dancing. It's not just a listening room. People of all abilities come here to dance, so the music has to be upbeat."

Both couples and singles tend to feel comfortable at the club.

"The Sea Note has a 'Cheers' mentality," Dillon said. "A lot of regulars, including women, come in by themselves because they know the staff will keep an eye out for them and they often know the people who come here."

As a result, Phillips said, the club provides a "safe haven for women" who don't want to be hassled.

"If someone tells a staff member they'd rather not be bothered by someone, that person is asked to leave," he said.

The names of featured groups would pull even the most skeptical potential customer inside out of sheer curiosity – Slippery Sneakers, Love Dogs, Fat City, Sleepy La Beef, Groove Juice Symphony, Paul Rishell and Annie Raines, Loaded Dice, Young Neal and the Vipers, the Bellevue Cadillac, and Room Full of Blues founder Duke Robillard.

Customers, who average about 150 per night, run the gamut from those who buy a few drinks to non-drinkers. All types of people seem to be drawn to the Sea Note's unique appeal.

So far this season, the club has hosted two world-famous national blues acts, Magic Slim and also the Teardrops, in addition to James Montgomery, Deborah Coleman — who was nominated as best blues guitarist for the W.C. Handy awards, the Academy Awards of blues — and '70s icon Commander Cody.

On one occasion, Cody, whom Dillon affectionately calls a "left-over hippie," locked his keyboard in the trunk of his vehicle. Showtime was close when a local music store provided a keyboard on short notice.

"It's like a comedy of errors," Dillon said, referring to what sometimes goes on behind the scenes, unbeknownst to the eagerly waiting audience. "As it turned out, a locksmith and the keyboard both arrived at the last minute, and the show went on. We always seem to find what we need."

Another time, a national act fired its drummer en route to the club, leaving a gap in the band.

"Amazingly enough, our sound man was a drummer and was able to fill in," Dillon said.

Phillips and Dillon pride themselves on the fact that the Sea Note doesn't offer "electronic screaming rap."

Besides that, what makes the Sea Note special in the owners' eyes?

"We definitely have relationships with our customers," said Dillon. "The staff remembers names, and the bartenders remember what kinds of drinks they like. People are friendly. It's not an anonymous club."

There is no rigid dress code.

"Some people come in clothes they wore to a wedding, others are less formal," Dillon said. "There's not a lot of pretense or an attitude like 'I'm too cool for words.'"

STAFF PHOTOS/SUSAN HANEY

Joe Phillips and Paula Dillon, owners of the Sea Note in Hull, relax at home with official club mascot, Jake.

Phillips and Dillon can be seen socializing with customers — Joe talking and Paula dancing — and having as much fun as they are.

The walls are filled with reproduction posters from all eras: Cream, Muddy Water, Billie Holiday, Santana, and a Beatles poster from their 1965 Lynn, Mass. performance.

There are even photo collages of happy customers.

"People ham it up and say, 'Take our photo,'" Dillon said with a smile. "It helps people feel at home."

Customers, who come from as far away as Halifax and Plymouth, never know whom they might run into — neighbor, member of a town board, long-lost friend, or high school buddy from 20 years ago.

Many customers hear about the Sea Note by word of mouth.

"It beats any form of advertising," Phillips said.

Longtime bartender Eric Peters of Scituate, in his trademark plaid hat, has noticed a change to an "older crowd" during the past few years as well as a lot of new faces.

"With all the new restaurants and hotels in the area, people are bumping into us," he said. "It's basically a polite crowd. The regulars like to whoop it up, but they're not rude about it."

Deborah Morreale misses the Sea Note when it closes during the winter.

"We can't wait for it to reopen," she said. "There's nowhere else to go."

She introduced her sister, Kerry Daigler, a former Sea Note employee, laughingly explaining that Kerry "liked it so much here, and was having so much fun she wanted to be a customer instead."

Counseling on dealing with loss offered

Last Tuesday evening, Aug. 20, just one week after a beloved member of this community, Paul J. Trendowicz, died as a result of an accidental drowning, a program, for all parents, was held at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

The facilitators of this program "Talking With Your Child about Loss" were Barbara Green, Ph.D., Clinical Psychologist and guest speaker Maria Trozzi, M.ED. and Director of the Good Grief Program, at Boston Medical Center. Trozzi is an assistant professor in the Department of Pediatrics at Boston University School of Medicine who worked with the families of the Columbine High School and World Trade Center disasters.

First, Green and Trozzi explained how death is understood differently by various ages. Developmentally, age 3-5 think death is reversible. The most important thing we can do for this age, to deal with death, is to be consistent and make sure routines are in place. At ages 6-9 they understand that death is not reversible, but do not think it could happen to them. They think death happens to someone old, very sick or someone careless. For this age, adults need to make the unmentionable, mentionable. Allow children to ask questions. Take cues of what to say from the children. Ages 9-13 have an adult understanding of death. They know that death includes everyone. In this pre-adolescent stage, their thoughts are more available than their feelings. They like to shrug it off as "no big deal" rather than to face their sadness.

Paul was a young man who touched all ages. Now questions are being asked by These various age groups. Paul had served his community service project for Boston College High School this spring at the Osgood Elementary School. Those students are questioning what happened to their friend, and parents and teachers need to know how to respond.

Trozzi suggested that if any groups, such as schools, were interested in pursuing counseling by the Good Grief program they could be in touch with her at the Boston Medical Center (617) 414-4005 and Green can also be reached at her private practice at (718)749-9227. A session was held on Tuesday, Aug. 27 at the Second Congregational Church by the Rev. Gary Ritts and Selma Ingber, psychologist, to respond to these concerns for the 12-14 age group.

These presentations are just the beginning of addressing a life-long loss.

The community is grateful for the voluntary support of these professionals. Our prayers and thoughts are with the Trendowicz Family.

Are you ready for some football?!?

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Payback is a...well, you know what. It's not too pleasant.

Hull took its lumps last year, but it looks like it will be the ones dishing out those lumps in 2002.

SOUTH SHORE LEAGUE FOOTBALL PREVIEW

The Pirates played several teams tough last fall, but finished with a record of 3-4-3 (2-2-2 in the South Shore League). From this team, only three seniors were lost, all starters but none irreplaceable. Halfback Jamie Stillman was the top ground gainer in 2001, but veteran coach John Anderson reportedly has a stable of athletes ready to compete for ball-lugging duty, and senior quarterback Kevin Silva returns with a solid year under his belt.

"Hull is the team I think most of us are looking at at this point as the one to beat," conceded Norwell coach Jim Sullivan. "I think we'll give them a run for their money, though, and (league co-champs) Cohasset and Abington should be pretty good again too, and you can never count out Carver."

The 14th year head coach also noted diplomatically that Mashpee, a school that has not been all that competitive on the gridiron (to be kind) in recent years, could "surprise"

Hull featured one of the SSL's most stingy defenses last year (12.8 points against per game), and that unit should be even better this year with so many of the principals being a year bigger and more experienced.

"When a team returns that many quality players with experience it puts them that much further ahead of other teams, especially at the beginning of the year," offered Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe.

Most of the SSL teams are hoping to eliminate much of their experience shortfalls in non-league play. Cohasset does not open league play until game 5 on the schedule on Oct. 11 (hosting Carver). Ditto for Norwell, which hosts Mashpee on that Friday night date.

"I think, when it's all said and done, you're going to see a very balanced league," assessed Rolfe, whose team doesn't square off with Hull until the Thanksgiving finale. "We've got some time to work out the kinks before we start in on the league."

"I think it could be a real interesting year," offered Sullivan. "I'm not ready to concede anything to Hull or anyone else, and I think that's what you'd hear around the league. We all have strengths, we all have areas of concern, and it's a long way to the end of the season."

It is safe to say that no other league in eastern Massachusetts has gone through more changes over the past decade than the South Shore League. With the high school football season rumbling towards its first weekend, the SSL has yet another new look to it. Even through all the changes there has always been one constant in that the South Shore League remains one of the most competitive leagues in the state.

A decade ago, the South Shore League showcased

Last year's rebuilding paves way for big field hockey campaign

By David Ingber
CORREPONDENT

Often times, when a coach says that it is a "rebuilding year," this is just a euphemism for low expectations. In the case of the Cohasset field hockey team, however, last year's retooling was just what the program needed to prepare for a run deep into the post season in 2002.

In the fall of 2000, there were 12 seniors on an incredible team that charged its way through the schedule in coming away with a 14-1-1 record. The only regular season loss was to eventual State finalists Hanover, who won the SSL over the Lady Skippers. And the team that bumped Cohasset from the playoffs, Martha's Vineyard, edged Hanover in the Sectional championship game.

In a school of Cohasset's size, where serious turnover of players is inevitable, it is nearly impossible to sustain that level of success. That is what led to the 2001 rebuilding year.

The 2001 Lady Skippers did have five seniors on the squad, but the devastating loss of 10 starters was too much to overcome, and the team fell just one tie away of a sea-level record to qualify for the state tourney. The bulk of that team, though, was made up of juniors and sophomores who are now upperclassmen with varsity experience.

This fall, 11 seniors will lead the field hockey program, which now draws more girls to tryout than ever before. Over 45 girls will combine to make up the varsity and junior varsity rosters, signifying how strong the program has become.

Leading the way will be senior captain forward Heather Peraino, the top scorer on the team last year and second leading scorer as a sophomore. She gained plenty of winning experience as the only non-senior who started for the 2000 team. With a hard shot and great playmaking ability, Peraino will make a strong run at becoming the league's best goal producer.

Helping Peraino up front will be seniors Sarah Dennis, Rachel Smith and Sarah Brady, who all very quietly racked up impressive assist totals in 2001. All three served as great passers last season and will no doubt continue to put pressure on opposing defenses this fall.

In the midfield, senior Lindsay Grossman and junior Frannie Noble both showed an ability to play both ways last year, combining speed with 12- year old softball team falls in championship game heartbreaker

By Robert Spofford
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The CYBSA girls softball program completed its summer season with teams competing in the 10, 12 and 14 and under divisions. All the programs had great success, especially the 12 and under team, which concluded its season by competing in the inaugural Duxbury Invitational Tournament.

With teams from Rockland, Brockton, Randolph, Kingston and Duxbury participating, the Cohasset team rode the pitching duo of Virginia Spofford and Christina Pinkus, along with some timely hitting from Marissa Tangherlini and Laura Campedelli, into the finals, where they faced Kingston.

To reach the finals, Cohasset played host Duxbury in the first game, where Christina Pinkus pitched a 1-hit, 11-strikeout complete game to pace the 11-4 victory. Solid contributions were made by Haley Haracz behind the plate and Anna Haggerty at short stop. McKenzie Durkin, Haley Haracz and Christina Pinkus all contributed by combining to score six of the 11 Cohasset runs.

Virginia Spofford took the mound in the second game against perennial power Rockland, and pitched a complete game 3-hitter to earn the win in the 10-5 decision. She put down the first eight batters she faced and 9-of-11. She received tremendous support in right field from Marissa Tangherlini, who had three unassisted putouts. Marissa also contributed with a bases loaded triple to straight away center in a six run third inning that broke it open.

Other solid contributions were made by Kristen Monoco behind the plate and Laura Campedelli at second. Kristen Monoco, Carley Zappolo and Rachel McMorris combined for 5 of the 10 Cohasset runs.

In the third game, Cohasset had another challenge from a larger program in Brockton. Cohasset came out of the box firing with Anna Haggerty leading the way in a 5 run first inning. The first five Cohasset batters all scored. Christina Pinkus took the mound and pitched solid, with Brockton coming back with five runs in the bottom of the third to make it a 7-5 game.

Cohasset responded again with the top of the order scoring four more runs, led once again by Anna Haggerty and Marissa Tangherlini. Virginia Spofford earned the save by coming in to pitch the final inning, striking out the side to seal the victory for Christina Pinkus and Cohasset, 13-8. Solid contributions were made by Lauren Mack who had a spectacular running catch in Center Field and Lindsey Hill at third who had a number of put outs along with scoring two runs in two at

Sailing club wraps up season

On Sunday, Aug. 25 the Cohasset Sailing Club ended its 2002 sailing season with its annual Awards Ceremony recognizing accomplishments of its junior and adult sailors, as well as service to the Club.

A record number of 27 children passed the Helmsman's Test. The multi-step exam measures competency on the water in tacking, sail trim, docking, safety, and other skills.

In the club's closing ceremonies a number of achievements were announced.

In a carefully executed experiment, each 12-year-old sailor was matched with an instructor as mentor. This pairing accelerated the learning process and the number of kids passing the test.

Vice Commodore Sandy Crough led the implementation of the mentor program.

"We need to tweak the mentor program but it has tremendous potential," Crough said. "Next year we will extend the program to the younger children's groups."

The innovation aims at heightening the club's future racing competitiveness and increasing the number of qualified recreational sailors.

one of the toughest league schedules in the area. Each team's schedule was an eight game gauntlet that could be compared to the Hockomock or Bay State League schedule. Over the course of the past few seasons, old standby's East Bridgewater and Hanover have moved on to the Patriot League, while Norton will be playing their first season in the Tri-Valley League in 2002. Second year participant Mashpee has been the only addition to the league since Norton entered back in 1989.

The South Shore League is now down to six teams in Abington, Carver, Cohasset, Hull, Mashpee and Norwell. This new six team league will also be moving down a division into a remodeled Div. 5 that coincides with the MIAA's realignment for post-season play. The new Div. 5 also includes the Tri-Valley, Catholic Central Large, and Commonwealth Large League.

The deck has been reshuffled and that has left a wide open race for the league title. In the early nineties East Bridgewater was king of hill and the baton was past to Norwell in the late nineties. Since Norwell's last of three straight league titles in 1999, Carver in 2000 and Abington and Cohasset in 2001 have gone on to grab the league crown. For Carver it was their first and Abington and Cohasset's shared title was their school's first since the early eighties.

The 2002 season should see the same type of wide open race it saw in 2001 for the title, with most returning a lot of experience, while others expect strong replacements for last year's graduates.

"I think you can easily say that most of the teams in this league are only going to get better and improve on what they did last year," said Abington head coach Jim Kelliher, who will be entering his 29th season. "Teams like Carver, Hull, Norwell and Mashpee are bringing a lot of experienced players back. Cohasset and us (Abington) lost some real good players, but I think we both have good players that are ready to step in and take their turn."

Whoops! A hard thrown pass slips through the fingers of Cohasset's High's Casey Colman at practice last week.

WATD's Bill Wilhelm, who has been covering area high school football games for the past two decades, agrees with Kelliher.

"Each team seems to have a very talented roster," he said. "I think that this may be a more competitive and enjoyable year for the South Shore League than last year if you can believe that."

Here's a breakdown on some of the 2002 South Shore League football teams:

Norwell

The Clippers return the bulk of their skill position talent, but must find replacements for five-sixths of their starting offensive line, including South Shore League All-Stars Tim Hunt, Tom Hannon and tight end Brent Smith.

"We're moving a lot of guys in and out and seeing what they can do tight now," said Sullivan this weekend, six days after opening camp. "It looks like that will be a lot of the focus for the next few weeks, but I'm trusting that (longtime offensive line coach/miracle worker) Al (Kassatly) will put something pretty good together before the games get here."

The rebuilding of the line begins around senior John Chappell, one of the league's most dominant interior players on both sides of the ball last year. Senior Bob Drummond, who was also lost for much of last season to a broken leg, is also back looking to reclaim his starting spot.

Also lost to the caps and gowns were top notch split end Ted Hughes and leading rusher (1,200 yards) and scorer (12 TDs) John Coleman.

Of course, junior Andrew Faranick was actually the team's leading rusher through four games last season, with a couple of 100-yard plus efforts under his belt, when he was knocked out of action by a case of mononucleosis. Starting fullback Joe Doyle is also back for his senior year, coming off a 500-yard season, and senior Brendan Feldstein and junior Frank Granara both gained valuable experience as wingbacks and in three back sets last year.

The Clippers rotated quarterbacks John Mohan and Steve Sullivan all of last season, sending in a new play with the fresh QB on every down, and Sullivan has no plans at this time to mess with that proven formula.

"They both did a good job last year, and being able to talk to one on the sidelines at all times was a nice bonus," said the 14th year head coach.

Several of these players will also be looked to on the other side of the ball. Chappell and Drummond appear entrenched up front. Granara, Faranick and Doyle are incumbents at linebacker, as is senior Matt O'Donnell. Mohan and Feldstein were regulars in the defensive backfield last year, and they've impressed back there in the early going, as have Terence Bohan and Greg Thornton.

Cohasset

The defending champion Skippers lost 12 seniors from last year's team that went 9-2 (with the 22-6 playoff loss to Tyngsboro) last season, including leading rusher and scorer Jason Brown (15 TDs and 1,400 yards rushing) and fellow league all-star Paul Previte, the team's top tackler from his middle linebacker spot.

The line on both sides of the ball was also hit hard with the graduations of Wil Prendergast, John Hussey, Brendan Goff, Jari Martin, Marc Musco and Chris Caron, as was the defensive backfield, with Dave Bouchard and Eric Libby now off to college.

Fifth year coach Tony Rolfe remains relatively optimistic, however, no doubt owing to the fact that five of his six top offensive performers return, led by SSL All-Star quarterback Mike Snowdale. All Mike did last year as a junior was throw for 14 TDs and 1,200 yards, both stats ranking him among the top Div. 5 QBs in Eastern Mass., and he'll have his favorite targets back this fall in juniors Chris Bilodeau (another all-star) and John Durkin and senior tight end Tom Anderson, along with hard hitting and running junior fullback Braun Goodson (6-2, 220).

Goodson has been tabbed to take over the lead runner responsibilities this year, with sophomore Ted Straughn (also a baseball and hockey standout) the favorite to step into the starting fullback spot.

Also likely to figure into the skill position mix are senior Chris McKenna and juniors Sean Connelly and Mike Dooley, all of whom performed well in spot duty last year.

"People say we're kind of a finesse team, and that might be so, but I think we've got some linemen who could step up and really be heard from this year," said Rolfe.

No doubt that the hits to the line on both sides of the ball were palpable, but returning senior all-stars Ben Lynner and Cosimo Camby should provide strong anchors this season. Junior Stephen Davis will also return to a starting role. Rolfe used most of his linemen on either offense or defense this past fall, Cambi being the lone exception. Worst case scenario, one figures he could always use these three standouts on both sides of the ball this season.

The addition of three sensational senior athletes – Matt Davis, Ian Kidder and Nick Spirito - who did not play football last year should add needed depth.

Abington

Under 29-year head coach Jim Kelliher (120–150–7), Abington will be looking to reprise last season's performance, which ended in an 8-2 record and a share of the South Shore League championship with Cohasset.

A year ago, Abington used its solid depth to rotate most of their front seven players on defense and will bring a lot of experience back on both their offensive and defensive lines. Junior quarterback Brian McSharry and senior running backs Greg Anderson and Adam Bowser will look to replace a group of outstanding skilled position players from last year's title team. McSharry may prove to be the breakout player of the year in the SSL.

While the Green Wave did lose some key players, particularly SSL All-stars Mike Miller (defensive back), Bob Lacerda (running back), Matt Bryan (quarterback), and linemen Tom McSharry, Justin Egan, and Christian Allen, several of Kelliher's starters return to the 2002 Abington roster.

The top returning starter core for the Green Wave are seniors Anderson (RB/DB), Bowser (RB/LB), Joe Hall (G/DL), Cole Barrett (G/LB), Brendan Kelliher (T/DL), Ben Melville (TE/DE), Kevin Iacobucci (C/DL). Other returning lettermen include seniors Shane Crowley (QB/DB), Paul Chartier (SE/DB), Jeremy Russell (RB/DB), Dave Ross (T/DL), Justin Macaluso (G/DL), and Tom Dion (TE/DE), Kevin Spaulding (RB/DE), and juniors McSharry (QB/DB), Cory Taylor (T/LB).

Among Abington's strengths this season will be its offensive and defensive line, as much of last year's returns, as well as team defense as a whole. Any weaknesses would be the team's lack of a kicking game and inexperience at skill positions.

Kelliher says he is confident that Abington has a shot at repeating what it accomplished a year ago. The Green Wave will play one of the toughest schedules in the SSL, with non-league games that include Hanover, Rockland, Whitman/Hanson and Williams (a private school in Amherst).

Carver

The Crusaders took a big step back from their 9-1Super Bowl season of 2000 with last fall's 2-7-1 finish, but the good news is several skill position players return, including runners Mike Howes and John Madore and quarterback Keith Houlie.

Seniors Greg Reighter and Matt Spaulding anchor a line which should be stronger on both sides of the ball..

Hull

Yikes!

Only three players total were lost to graduation, and though all three – top runner Jamie Stillman, wideout Ryan Clark and 250-pound lineman Phillip Vallaincourt — were regulars, none is considered irreplaceable, especially to a quality veteran coach like John Sullivan (12th year).

Hull featured one of the SSL's stingiest defenses last year (12.8 points against per game), and that unit should be even better this year with so many of the principals — seniors Mike Foley, Lucas Lally, Joe Grieco, Greg Fleck, Mark Saville, Josh Mele, Pat McCarthy and Chris Yarus — being a year bigger and more experienced.

Mele and Fleck will also anchor the offensive line for the third year in a row, and Greico and Lally are reportedly just two of several quality candidates to carry the ball. Fullback Mike Foley is another.

That's a lot of support for a quality veteran quarterback like Kevin Silva, whose back with a solid year's experience under his belt.

Mashpee

Yikes again…but not in the good sense: 0-6 in league, 0-10 overall, outscored 59-231. The good news is it probably can't get worse for the Falcons in year two of their South Shore League foray. Then again, this did mark the second straight winless season for the Cape team.

The graduation of quarterback Jeff Young certainly doesn't help the building process, nor do the losses of key two-way linemen Tom Holmes and Kyle Hunt.

However, the Falcons do return several starters for their senior years, so overall experience is a plus. The lines — featuring the likes of Mike Royko (210 pounds), Pat Kwedor (225 pounds), Mike Mahoney (225 pounds) and Ryan Merrigan (220 pounds) – may be among the elite in the SSL.

bats.

With these three victories Cohasset earned the number one seed entering the second day single elimination, which was a huge advantage given the hot weather conditions.

In the semifinals, Cohasset again faced Rockland. This team also proved no match for the pitching of Christina and Virginia, who combined on the mound in this 19-7 victory which ended after 4-fi innings under the mercy rule. Christina stuck out 9 of the first 11 batters she faced.

Cohasset batters showed tremendous patience at the plate, as the Rockland pitchers had control trouble, which played a big part in the 19 runs over 4 innings. Kristen Monoco was solid again behind the plate, as were Haley Haracz and Carley Zappolo at first base, sharing the defensive responsibilities.

Marissa Tangherlini continued her offensive display by scoring three runs and knocking in three more. Laura Campedelli who also had three RBIs.

The finals came down to Cohasset and Kingston, both teams 4-0 heading into the final game. Christina Pinkus again took the mound and dominated the Kingston players through five innings by striking out 10 of the 15 batters she faced.

Kingston was able to squeeze two runs over with the combination of solid bunts and steals after a couple of walks.

On the other side, Cohasset was driving the ball hard but right at Kingston players, who displayed tremendous defensive skill all around the infield and outfield.

Cohasset clung to a 3-2 lead through four complete innings, with Virginia Spofford scoring two runs with some heads up base running. Marissa Tangherlini was again around the ball, scoring the other run. In the top of the fifth, Kingston was able to get it going and brought in five runs before Christina was able to strike out the side. Cohasset continued to find the Kingston players in their half of the inning and were unable to bring anything across.

Virginia Spofford came on in the top of the 7th[h] and helped to keep Cohasset close by shutting Kingston down with a strike out and two rollers back to her, which she converted to Haley Haracz at first.

The bottom of the 7th is when the excitement began. Christina Pinkus lead off with a walk and was doubled home by Laura Campedelli with a solid shot over the third base bag. Haley Haracz worked a walk, bringing up Kenzie Durkin, who lined a solid grounder down to third where the Kingston player just knocked it down to get Laura Campedelli at third.

With the players moving, Kristen Monoco grounded out to first, advancing Haley and Kenzie to second and third. With two outs, Lauren Mack smacked a solid single up the middle, scoring two to pull Cohasset back to within a pair at 8-6.

Lauren stole second on the next pitch, putting herself in scoring position. Sally Meehan came up and sent a solid shot to left center that the Kingston player just missed getting her glove on to score Lauren, who was moving on the pitch, making it 8-7.

With the tying run on second, Carly Zappolo drove a ball between short and second that on any other day would have made in through the infield. However, it was snagged with an excellent defensive play and she was nipped at first to end the game.

While there was some disappointment in the Cohasset dugout, that quickly changed once they all realized what they had accomplished and how far they had come in their first two seasons of travel ball. Prior to this, there had been no organized program.

The complete roster for the tournament was Laura Campedelli, McKenzie Durkin, Anna Haggerty, Haley Haracz, Lindsey Hill, Rachel McMorris, Lauren Mack, Sally Meehan, Kristen Monaco, Christina Pinkus, Virginia Spofford, Marissa Tangherlini and Carley Zappolo.

New regional lacrosse program for junior high boys at Hanover YMCA

A first-of-its-kind regional lacrosse program for middle-school and junior high boys will be launched this September by Cohasset High varsity boys' coach Kevin Orcutt.

The program, to be held Sundays at the Hanover YMCA complex at Mill Pond, will be open to any South Shore player interested in improving both his individual and team skills, said Orcutt.

"Eventually, we plan to develop this as a group that will enter age-appropriate tournaments during the off-seasons and in summer," said Orcutt, who coached Cohasset to the state finals in 2001 and the quarterfinals last spring, and led a pair of Bay State Games gold-medal winning teams in 2001 and 2002.

The program – which will be called Hawks Lacrosse – begins on Sunday, September 15. It will run as a 10-week session this fall.

The program will go from 9 am until 11 am each Sunday. The total program cost will be $90 per player. Players will be expected to bring their own equipment, including stick, helmet, gloves and shoulder pads.

Players and their parents who would like to pre-register for the program can do so by calling Coach Orcutt at either 781-837-7764 or 617-827-4160, or by e-mail at kocoach4@aol.com. Registration forms will be available at the Hanover Mill Pond YMCA on Sunday, September 15 at 9 a.m.

"Whether you're someone who's learning the game, or someone who's got a lot of experience," said Orcutt, "this is a program that's going to make you a better, stronger player."

Starland opens to local HS athletes

As local high school sports programs begin to gear up for the coming year, the new owners of Starland Sports & Fun Park want to get involved.

Starland owners have sent letters to the high school principals and athletic directors of Hanover, Silver Lake, Marshfield, Scituate, Norwell, Cohasset and Hingham, offering each a variety of community contributions.

Free access to driving range and batting cages

Starland's driving range and batting cages will soon become available to area high school varsity and junior varsity golf and baseball programs for periodic free use. "We view the facilities here at Starland as valuable community resources. We want to make them available to young athletes free o charge," said Starland principal Peter Morin. "We are already scheduling several local golf teams for their fall practice times."

Activity fees for local high school students

Starland also plans to work out programs for payment of local student access fees for its employees. "Keeping reliable employees is very important to a successful operation," General Manager David Sale observed. "We believe that a young man or lady who is involved in school activities and is eager to work part-time and summers for Starland is someone we want to reward. Paying his or her activity fees is just one way of doing that."

Financial contributions, fund-raising for boosters

Starland has also committed to purchasing advertisements in local varsity football and hockey programs; and will make the Starland facility available to boosters clubs for their fund-raising efforts. "Starland is a natural venue for boosters clubs to hold fund-raising activities and events, and we think we can help them raise significant funds for their programs," said Morin. Starland's weekend ride packages will be made available to area boosters at significant discounts, enabling boosters to sell the packages for face value and bank the difference. "Imagine, area kids can make significant contributions to their sports programs and ride go-carts at the same time," said Sale.

The Starland facilities will be made available weekend days throughout the fall. Area boosters club directors should contact Sale or Morin directly at Starland by calling 781-826-3083.

conditioning to spread out opponent's wingers.

Defensively, senior Sera Genovese started every game last year as the goalie, and made visible improvements over the course of the season. She even saw some varsity time in 2000, making her another third year varsity player. Recording shutouts in four of the Lady Skippers seven wins last year, Genovese could well receive strong All-Star consideration this season.

In front of Genovese will be a host of seniors and juniors who had success shutting down some offenses last year. They even kept Div. I team Silver Lake from taking a single shot in the final game of the season.
